revolutionize /ˌrevəˈluːʃəˌnaɪz/ v.tr. (also -ise) introduce fundamental change to.

Revolutions of 1848 a series of revolts against monarchical rule in Europe during 1848. They sprang from a shared background of autocratic government, lack of representation for the middle classes, economic grievances, and growing nationalism. Revolution occurred first in France, where socialists and supporters of universal suffrage caused the overthrow of King Louis Philippe. In the German and Italian states there were uprisings and demonstrations demanding that Germany and Italy be united as democratic republics; in Austria rioting caused the flight of the emperor and of the Foreign Minister Metternich, and peoples subject to the Habsburg empire, notably the Hungarians, demanded autonomy. All of the revolutions ended in failure and repression, but some of the liberal reforms gained as a result (such as universal male suffrage in France) survived, and nationalist aims in Germany and Italy were soon achieved (see RISORGIMENTO).

Rhodes^{2} /rəʊdz/, Cecil (John) (1853–1902), British-born South African statesman, Prime Minister of Cape Colony 1890–6. He went to South Africa in 1870, where he became a successful diamond prospector, and twenty years later owned 90 per cent of the world's production of diamonds. Entering politics in 1881, he expanded British territory in southern Africa, annexing Bechuanaland (now Botswana) in 1884 and developing Rhodesia from 1889 onwards through the British South Africa Company, which he founded. While Premier, Rhodes was implicated in the Jameson Raid of 1895 and forced to resign. In his will, he established the system of Rhodes Scholarships to allow students from the British Empire (now the Commonwealth), the US, and Germany to study at Oxford University.

Rhodes^{3} /rəʊdz/, Wilfred (1877–1973), English cricketer. An all-rounder, he played for Yorkshire (1898–1930) and for England (1899–1926), scoring almost 40,000 runs during this time and taking 4,187 first-class wickets, more than any other player.

Rhodesia /rəʊ'diːʃə, -'diːʒə/ 1 the former name of a large territory in central southern Africa, divided into Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia) and Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe). The region was developed by and named after Cecil Rhodes, through the British South Africa Company, which administered it until Southern Rhodesia became a self-governing British colony in 1923 and Northern Rhodesia a British protectorate in 1924. From 1953 to 1963 Northern and Southern Rhodesia were united with Nyasaland (now Malawi) to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. 2 the name adopted by Southern Rhodesia when Northern Rhodesia left the Federation in 1963 to become the independent republic of Zambia. - Rice provides the staple diet of half the world's population and is second only to wheat in terms of total output. It was first cultivated in India *c.*3000 BC and the great majority is still grown in eastern and SE Asia, although it has also become an important crop in the southern US, Brazil, and other parts of the New World. Rice seedlings are usually planted in flooded fields or paddies, so that terraces are necessary on hillsides and a reliable source of water is essential. The grain often has a coloured and nutritious skin, and brown rice (which only has the husk removed) is still rich in protein, vitamins, and minerals. However, this is removed by the milling and polishing processes, so that polished white rice is much less nutritious. African rice belongs to the related species O. glaberrima, whereas the so-called wild rice is not a true rice at all.

Richard^{1} /ˈrɪtʃəd/ the name of three kings of England:

Richard I (known as Richard Coeur de Lion or Richard the Lion-Heart) (1157–99), son of Henry II, reigned 1189–99. Richard's military exploits made him a medieval legend, but meant that he spent most of his reign absent from his kingdom, leading to a growth in the power of the barons. Soon after succeeding his father he left to lead the Third Crusade, defeating Saladin at Arsuf (1191), but failing to capture Jerusalem. He was taken prisoner on his way home in 1192 by Duke Leopold of Austria (1157–94) and subsequently held hostage by the Holy Roman emperor Henry VI (1165–97), only being released in 1194 following the payment of a huge ransom. After later embarking on a campaign against Philip II of France, Richard was fatally wounded during the siege of the castle of Châlus.

Richard II (1367–1400), son of the Black Prince, reigned 1377–99. On his accession as a minor the government was placed in the hands of selected nobles, dominated by his uncle John of Gaunt. During this time Richard helped to put down the Peasants' Revolt, but was soon facing a threat to his power from rebel nobles; in 1389 he asserted his right to rule independently of his protectors and later executed or banished most of his former opponents (1397–8). However, his confiscation of John of Gaunt's estate on the latter's death provoked Henry Bolingbroke's return from exile to overthrow him.

Richard III (1452–85), brother of Edward IV, reigned 1483–5. During the Wars of the Roses he served as a commander in the battle at Tewkesbury (1471), which restored Edward IV to the throne. After his brother's death he served as Protector to his nephew Edward V, who, two months later, was declared illegitimate on dubious grounds and subsequently disappeared. (See PRINCES IN THE TOWER.) As king, Richard ruled with some success for a brief period, before being defeated and killed at Bosworth Field (1485) by Henry Tudor (later Henry VII). Historical opinion on the popular picture of Richard as a hunchbacked cutthroat usurper is still divided; many modern historians argue that he was demonized as part of Tudor propaganda.

Richard^2 /'rɪtʃəd/, Sir Cliff (born Harry Roger Webb) (b.1940), British pop singer, born in India. Influenced by rock and roll, he formed his own group the Drifters (later called the Shadows) in 1958, recording such songs as 'Living Doll' (1959) and 'Bachelor Boy' (1961) with them. Richard went on to act in several films, mainly musicals such as Expresso Bongo (1960) and Summer Holiday (1962). He left the Shadows in 1968, and in the 1970s became a born-again Christian; he has since combined a successful pop career with evangelism.

Richard Coeur de Lion /ˌkɜː də 'liːon/, Richard I of England (see RICHARD^1).

Richards^1 /'rɪtʃədz/, Sir Gordon (1904–86), English jockey. He was champion jockey twenty-six times between 1925 and 1953.

Ridley /ˈrɪdlɪ/, Nicholas (*c.*1500–55), English Protestant bishop and martyr. He became one of Thomas Cranmer's chaplains in 1537 and, during the reign of Edward VI, was appointed bishop of Rochester (1547) and then of London (1550). During this period, he emerged as one of the leaders of the Reformation, opposing the Catholic policies of Edward's sister and successor Mary I, for which he was later imprisoned (1553) and burnt at the stake in Oxford.

Riefenstahl /ˈriːf(ə)nˌʃtɑːl/, Leni (full name Bertha Helene Amalie Riefenstahl) (1902–2003), German film-maker and photographer. She is chiefly known for two films which she made during the 1930s; Triumph of the Will (1934), a powerful depiction of the 1934 Nuremberg Nazi Party rallies, and Olympia (1938), a two-part documentary of the 1936 Berlin Olympic Games. She was not a Nazi Party member and insisted on full control over these films, but outside Germany her work was regarded as Nazi propaganda and her postwar reputation suffered as a result.

Riel /riːˈel/, Louis (1844–85), Canadian political leader. He headed the rebellion of the Metis at Red River Settlement (now in Manitoba) in 1869 to protest against the planned transfer of the territorial holdings of the Hudson's Bay Company to Canadian jurisdiction, a move which the Metis feared would result in the loss of some of their land to Anglo-Protestant settlers. Having formed a provisional government with himself at its head, Riel oversaw negotiations for acceptable terms for union with Canada, including the establishment of the province of Manitoba. He was executed for treason after leading a further rebellion of the Metis in the Saskatchewan valley (1884–5).

Risorgimento /rɪˌsɔːdʒɪˈmentəʊ/ the movement for the unification and independence of Italy in the 19th century. Much of Italy had experienced liberal reforms and an end to feudal and ecclesiastical privilege during the Napoleonic Wars, and the restoration of repressive regimes led to revolts in Naples and Piedmont (1821) and Bologna (1831). Italian nationalists began to support Guiseppe Mazzini and the Young Italy movement, and were given impetus in their struggle by Camillo Cavour's newspaper Il Risorgimento from 1847. Attempts to drive the Austrians out of Lombardy and Venetia in 1848 were unsuccessful, and uprisings during the Revolutions of 1848 also failed; with French aid, however, the Austrians were driven out of northern Italy by 1859, and the south was won over by Garibaldi. Voting was held and resulted in the acceptance of Victor Emmanuel II as the first king of a united Italy in 1861. [It., = resurrection]

Robert /ˈrɒbət/ the name of three kings of Scotland:

Robert I (known as Robert the Bruce) (1274–1329), reigned 1306–29. He led the Scottish campaign against Edward I after the death of Sir William Wallace. His subsequent campaign against Edward II culminated in victory at Bannockburn (1314). He then went on to re-establish Scotland as a separate kingdom, negotiating the Treaty of Northampton (1328), which committed the Plantagenets to recognizing his title as king of Scotland and relinquishing their claims to overlordship.

Robert II (1316–90), grandson of Robert the Bruce, reigned 1371–90. He was steward of Scotland from 1326 to 1371, and the first of the Stuart line.

Robert III (born John) (c.1337–1406), son of Robert II, reigned 1390–1406. Before ascending the throne, he was involved in an accident in which the kick of a horse made him physically disabled. As a result, his reign was marked by a power struggle amongst members of his family and Scotland was chiefly ruled by his brother Robert, Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420).

Roberts /ˈrɒbəts/, Frederick Sleigh, 1st Earl Roberts of Kandahar (1832–1914), British Field Marshal. He won a Victoria Cross in 1858 for his part in suppressing the Indian Mutiny and commanded the British army in its victory at Kandahar (1880), which ended the Second Afghan War (1878–80). As Commander-in-Chief (1899–90) during the Second Boer War, he planned the successful march on the Boer capital of Pretoria (1900).

Robert the Bruce, Robert I of Scotland (see ROBERT).

Robeson /ˈrəʊbs(ə)n/, Paul (Bustill) (1898–1976), American singer and actor. His singing of 'Ol' Man River' in Jerome Kern's musical Showboat (1927) established his international reputation. Noted for his rich and resonant bass voice, he gave many recitals of spirituals. As an actor, Robeson was particularly identified with the title role of Othello, which he performed to great acclaim in London (1930) and on Broadway (1943). He was a prominent black activist, and had his passport revoked in 1950 because of his Communist affiliations.

Robespierre /ˈrəʊbzpjeə(r)/, Maximilien François Marie Isidore de (1758–94), French revolutionary. Robespierre was the leader of the radical Jacobins in the National Assembly and, as such, backed the execution of Louis XVI and implemented a successful purge of the moderate Girondists (both 1793). Later the same year he consolidated his power with his election to the Committee of Public Safety and his appointment as president of the National Convention. Robespierre was guillotined for his role in the Terror, although he objected to the scale of the executions.

robotics /rəʊˈbɒtɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the study of robots; the art or science of their design, construction, operation, and application. The term was coined by the science-fiction writer Isaac Asimov in 1941. Robots today consist of fixed or mobile mechanical manipulators linked to a computer, and follow a fixed but reprogrammable sequence of instructions. Simple robots are widely used in production engineering, especially where a variety of goods is to be produced with minimum changeover time. The performance of robots is being continually improved, especially by the provision of sensors and of automatic planning and recovery from errors, and they can handle increasingly complex tasks.

Rob Roy /rɒb ˈrɔɪ/ (born Robert Macgregor) (1671–1734), Scottish outlaw. His escapades as a highland cattle thief and opponent of the government's agents on the eve of the Jacobite uprising of 1715 were popularized in Sir Walter Scott's novel of the same name (1817).

Robsart /ˈrɒbsɑːt/, Amy (1532–60), English noblewoman, wife of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. Her mysterious death at a country house near Oxford aroused suspicions that her husband (the favourite of Queen Elizabeth I) had had her killed so that he could be free to marry the queen. Sir Walter Scott's novel Kenilworth (1821) follows this version of her fate.

Robson /ˈrɒbs(ə)n/, Dame Flora (1902–84), English actress. She is noted for her screen performances of historical parts such as the Empress Elizabeth in Catherine the Great (1934) and Queen Elizabeth I in Fire Over England (1937). [F roquette f. It. rochetto dimin. of rocca distaff, with ref. to its cylindrical shape]

- The earliest use of rockets was in China, where rockets propelled by gunpowder were in use probably by AD 1232. Their use in war and as fireworks spread quickly to the Middle East and Europe, but they failed to displace guns as the main artillery weapons. At the end of the 19th century a Russian schoolteacher, Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, proposed the use of liquid fuels and pointed out that rockets could be used to travel in space. In the US, Robert Goddard launched the first liquid-fuelled rocket in 1926, and in Germany and Russia experimenters worked on both liquid and solid-fuelled rockets. In Germany, a team led by Wernher von Braun developed the V2 rocket (see V^3), which first flew in 1942 and was used against the Allies in the Second World War. It was the first long-range ballistic weapon and the first rocket capable of reaching the edge of space. After the war von Braun and other Germans were recruited by the Americans and Soviets, and worked to develop rockets to carry nuclear warheads, launch satellites, and assist in space exploration; this culminated in the American Saturn V rocket used to lift the Apollo missions into earth orbit. At the same time solid-fuelled rockets have continued to be developed as artillery and aircraft weapons, such as the French Exocet and American Sidewinder.

rocket^2 /ˈrokɪt/ n. 1 (also sweet rocket) a fast-growing plant, esp. of the genus Hesperis or Sisymbrium. 2 a variety of a cruciferous annual plant, Eruca vesicaria, grown for salad. Rodin /ˈrəʊdæn/, Auguste (1840–1917), French sculptor. Influenced by Michelangelo, Rodin was chiefly concerned with the human form in his work, and developed a naturalistic style that made him a controversial figure in his day. His first major work, The Age of Bronze (1875–6), was considered so lifelike that Rodin was alleged to have taken a cast from a live model. By 1880 he had been publicly commissioned to create The Gate of Hell for the Musée des arts décoratifs; it remained unfinished at his death and its many figures inspired such independent statues as The Thinker (1880) and The Kiss (1886).

Rogers[2] /ˈrodʒəz/, Sir Richard (George) (b.1933), British architect, born in Italy. He was a leading exponent of high-tech architecture and founded his own practice, Team 4, in 1963. He gained international recognition in the 1970s for the Pompidou Centre in Paris (1971–7), which he designed in partnership with the Italian architect Renzo Piano (b.1937). Rogers's other major work, the Lloyd's Building in London (1986), followed a similarly original high-tech design and also featured ducts and pipes on the outside of the steel and glass building.

Roget /ˈroʒeɪ/, Peter Mark (1779–1869), English scholar. He worked as a physician but is remembered as the compiler of Roget's Thesaurus of English Words and Phrases, which he completed after his retirement and was first published in 1852. The work, which has been revised many times since, is important for its innovative classification of words according to underlying concept or meaning.

Rolland /'rolon/, Romain (1866–1944), French novelist, dramatist, and essayist. His interest in genius led to biographies of Beethoven (1903), Michelangelo (1905), and Tolstoy (1911), and ultimately to Jean-Christophe (1904–12), a cycle of ten novels about a German composer. These epitomize the literary form known as the roman-fleuve and in their portrayal of the composer's friendship with a Frenchman symbolized Rolland's desire for harmony between nations. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1915.

Roman baths n.pl. a building containing a complex of rooms designed for bathing, relaxing, and socializing, as used in ancient Rome. Such baths have been found throughout the territories of the Roman Empire. They generally followed a similar design, which had become standard by the 1st century BC. On arrival, a bather was covered with oil before taking exercise and then going into the hot room (caldarium), which was warmed by underfloor heating. Next was the hot-air or steam-room (sudatorium), where the bather's body was scraped of sweat and dirt with a curved instrument (a strigil), followed by the warm room (tepidarium) and finally the cold room (frigidarium).

Roman Britain Britain during the period AD 43–410, when most of Britain was part of the Roman Empire. Britain was twice invaded briefly by Julius Caesar 55–54 BC, but was not conquered until the invasion of Claudius in AD 43. The conquest of England as far north as Fosse Way was swiftly accomplished, and the frontier of the Roman province of Britain was eventually established at Hadrian's Wall; the more northerly Antonine Wall was breached and abandoned (*c.*181). The Roman military presence was reinforced by a large garrison and a network of roads radiating out from London (Londinium), but a wider policy of romanization was also followed: Roman settlers and traders built villas, and Roman towns including York (Eboracum), Lincoln (Lindum Colonia), St Albans (Verulamium), and Colchester (Camulodunum) were established or developed.

Roman Catholic adj. & n. ● adj. of the Roman Catholic Church. ● n. a member of the Roman Catholic Church. □ Roman Catholicism n.

Roman Catholic Church the branch of the Christian Church which acknowledges the pope as its head, especially as it has developed since the Reformation. It is the largest Church of Western Christianity, dominant particularly in South America and southern Europe. The Church claims an authority derived directly from the Apostles, particularly St Peter, who is regarded as the first pope. Much modern Roman Catholic thought and practice is grounded in scholastic theology and in the Church's response to the Reformation made at the Council of Trent (1545–63). The doctrine of papal infallibility was formally defined in 1870, the culmination of centuries of tension between papal authority and that of the Councils of the Church. Roman Catholicism differs from Protestantism generally in the importance it grants to tradition and ritual, and especially in its doctrine of the Eucharist (transubstantiation), its celibate male priesthood, its emphasis on confession, its doctrine of the seven sacraments, and the veneration of the Virgin Mary and other saints. Its relations with the Orthodox Church are hampered by disagreements concerning the Filioque and the status of Uniat churches. The Roman Catholic Church became less rigid after the Second Vatican Council (1962–5), abandoning a universal Latin liturgy and being influenced by movements such as ecumenism and liberation theology, but its continuing opposition to divorce, abortion, and artificial contraception remains controversial.

Roman de la rose /ˌrəʊmɒn də læ ˈrəʊz/ a French poem of the 13th century, an allegorical romance embodying the aristocratic ethic of courtly love. It was composed by two different authors some forty years apart. The poem was extremely influential on the literature of the Middle Ages. [F, = romance of the rose]

Roman Empire the overseas territories under Roman rule from 27 BC, when Augustus became the first emperor, to AD 476, when the last Roman emperor, Romulus Augustulus (reigned 475–6), was deposed. At its greatest extent Roman rule or influence extended from Armenia and Mesopotamia in the east to the Iberian peninsula in the west, and from the Rhine and Danube in the north to Egypt and provinces on the Mediterranean coast of North Africa. The empire was divided after the death of Theodosius I (AD 395) into the Western Empire and the Eastern or Byzantine Empire (centred on Constantinople). Peace was maintained largely by the substantial presence of the Roman army, and a degree of unity was achieved by an extensive network of roads, a single legal system, and a common language (Latin in the West, Greek in the East). Eventually, the sheer extent of the territories led to the collapse of the Western Empire: Rome was sacked by the Visigoths under Alaric in 410, and the last emperor of the West, Romulus Augustulus, was deposed in 476. The Eastern Empire, which was stronger, lasted until 1453 (see BYZANTINE EMPIRE).

Romanesque /ˌrəʊməˈnesk/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to a style of architecture which prevailed in Europe *c.*900–1200, although sometimes dated back to the end of the Roman Empire (5th century). (See note below.) ● n. Romanesque architecture. [F f. roman ROMANCE]

- Romanesque architecture is characterized by round arches and massive vaulting, and by heavy piers, columns, and walls with small windows. It arose through the growth of monasticism and the revival of the Church after a period of instability; additionally, an increase in the functions of churches necessitated buildings with more chapels and larger choirs. Although disseminated throughout western Europe, the style reached its fullest development in central and northern France; the equivalent style in England is usually called Norman.

Prefigured by Honoré de Balzac and Émile Zola, this form was practised particularly by French writers in the first half of the 20th century, notably Romain Rolland. [F, = river novel]

Romania /rəʊˈmeɪnɪə/ (also Rumania /ruːˈmeɪ-/) a country in SE Europe with a coastline on the Black Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 23,276,000; official language, Romanian; capital, Bucharest. In Roman times Romania formed the imperial province of Dacia, and in the Middle Ages it consisted of the principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia, which were swallowed up by the Ottoman Empire in the 15th–16th centuries. The two principalities united in 1861 and gained independence in 1878, and although conquered in 1916 by the Central Powers, Romania emerged from the peace settlement with fresh territorial gains in Bessarabia (lost in 1940) and Transylvania. After the Second World War, in which it supported Germany, Romania became a Communist state under Soviet domination. After 1974 the country pursued an increasingly independent course under the virtual dictatorship of Nicolae Ceauşescu. His regime collapsed in violent popular unrest in 1989, and a new constitution, enshrining a democratic, free-market system, was approved by referendum in 1991.

Romanov /rəʊˈmɑːnɒf/ a dynasty that ruled in Russia from the accession of Michael Romanov in 1613 until the overthrow of the last tsar, Nicholas II, in 1917.

Roman Republic the ancient Roman state 509 BC–27 BC from the expulsion of the Etruscan monarchs (see TARQUINIUS) until the assumption of power by Augustus (Octavian) (see ROMAN EMPIRE). The republic was dominated by a landed aristocracy, the patricians, who ruled through the advisory Senate and two annually elected chief magistrates or consuls; the plebeians or common people had their own representatives, the tribunes, who in time gained the power of veto over the other magistrates. There was also a considerable slave population, largely made up of enslaved prisoners of war. During the life of the republic Rome came to dominate the rest of Italy and, following the Punic and Macedonian Wars, began to acquire extensive dominions in the Mediterranean and Asia Minor. But the system of government that served a city-state well proved inadequate for control of an empire: a series of ambitious military leaders (Marius, Sulla, Pompey, Julius Caesar, Mark Antony) came to the fore, dissatisfied with the Senate's control of government and each able to count on the support of a devoted soldiery, until civil wars culminated in Caesar's brief dictatorship. This established the principle of personal autocracy, and after Caesar's assassination another round of civil war ended with Octavian's assumption of authority.

romanticism /rəʊ'mæntɪˌsɪz(ə)m/ n. (also Romanticism) a movement in the arts and literature which originated in the late 18th century as a reaction against the order and restraint of classicism and neoclassicism, and was a rejection of the rationalism which characterized the Enlightenment. In their place were inspiration, irrationality, subjectivity, and the primacy of the individual. In music, the period embraces much of the 19th century, with composers including Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, Wagner, and (in the opinion of some critics) Beethoven. Writers exemplifying the movement include Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Shelley, and Keats; among romantic painters are such stylistically diverse artists as William Blake, J. M. W. Turner, Delacroix, and Goya. In its implicit idea of an artist as an isolated misunderstood genius the movement has not yet ended.

Rome /rəʊm/ (Italian Roma /'ro:ma/) the capital of Italy and of Lazio region, situated on the River Tiber about 25 km (16 miles) inland; pop. (1990) 2,791,350. The name is used allusively to refer to the ancient Roman Republic and Empire, and also the Roman Catholic Church, based in the city at the Vatican. According to tradition, the ancient city was founded by Romulus (after whom it is named) in 753 BC on the Palatine Hill. As it grew it spread to the other six hills of Rome: Aventine, Caelian, Capitoline, Esquiline, and Quirinal. Rome was ruled by kings until the expulsion of Tarquinius Superbus in 510 BC led to the establishment of a republic (see ROMAN REPUBLIC). By the mid-2nd century BC Rome had subdued the whole of Italy and had come to dominate the western Mediterranean and the Hellenistic world in the east, acquiring the first of the overseas possessions that became the empire (see ROMAN EMPIRE). By the time of the Roman Empire's decline and fall the city was overshadowed politically by Constantinople, but emerged as the seat of the papacy and as the spiritual capital of Western Christianity. In the 14th and 15th centuries Rome became a centre of the Renaissance and a great focus of cultural and artistic activity. It remained under papal control, forming part of the Papal States, until 1871, when it was made the capital of a unified Italy. In 1929, following the Lateran Treaty, the Vatican City was granted the status of an independent sovereign state within the city.

Rousseau^{1} /ˈruːsəʊ/, Henri (Julien) (known as 'le Douanier' = customs officer) (1844–1910), French painter. After retiring as a customs official in 1893, he devoted himself fully to painting, although it was only after his death that he was recognized as a notable naive artist. Fantastic dreams and exotic jungle landscapes often form the subjects of his bold and colourful paintings. Famous works include the Sleeping Gypsy (1897) and Tropical Storm with Tiger (1891).

Rousseau^{2} /ˈruːsəʊ/, Jean-Jacques (1712–78), French philosopher and writer, born in Switzerland. From 1750 he came to fame with a series of works highly critical of the existing social order; his philosophy is underpinned by a belief in the fundamental goodness of human nature, encapsulated in the concept of the 'noble savage', and the warping effects of civilization. In his novel Émile (1762), Rousseau formulated new educational principles giving the child full scope for individual development in natural surroundings, shielded from the corrupting influences of civilization. His Social Contract (1762) anticipated much of the thinking of the French Revolution (see SOCIAL CONTRACT). Rousseau is also noted for his Confessions (1782), one of the earliest autobiographies.

Rousseau^{3} /ˈruːsəʊ/, (Pierre Étienne) Théodore (1812–67), French painter. He was a leading landscapist of the Barbizon School and placed great importance on making preliminary studies for studio paintings out of doors, directly from nature. His works typically depict the scenery and changing light effects of the forest of Fontainebleau, and include Under the Birches, Evening (1842–4).

Rubens /ˈruːbɪnz/, Sir Peter Paul (1577–1640), Flemish painter. The foremost exponent of northern Baroque, he spent a period of time in Italy (1600–8), where he studied the work of artists such as Titian and Raphael, before settling in Antwerp and becoming court portraitist in 1609. He quickly gained fame as a religious painter with altarpieces such as Descent from the Cross (1611–14). He built up a prestigious workshop that executed numerous commissions from across Europe ranging from decorative ceilings to landscapes; its more famous assistants included Anthony Van Dyck and Jacob Jordaens. On a visit to England (1629–30) he was knighted by Charles I and executed several commissions for him, including a series of decorative ceilings at the Banqueting Hall in Whitehall. In addition to his portraits, Rubens is perhaps best known for mythological paintings featuring voluptuous female nudes, as in Venus and Adonis (*c.*1635).

Rupert, Prince /ˈruːpət/ (1619–82), English Royalist general, son of Frederick V, elector of the Palatinate, and nephew of Charles I. Born in Bohemia, he went to England and joined the Royalist side just before the outbreak of the Civil War in 1642. He made his name in the early years of the war as a leader of cavalry, but after a series of victorious engagements was defeated by Parliamentarian forces at Marston Moor (1644) and Naseby (1645). He later lived chiefly in France until the Restoration (1660), when he returned to England and commanded naval operations against the Dutch (1665–7 and 1672–4). In 1670 Rupert became the first governor of the Hudson's Bay Company in Canada. He was also responsible for the introduction of mezzotint engraving into England.

Rupert's Land (also Prince Rupert's Land) a historic region of northern and western Canada, originally granted in 1670 by Charles II to the Hudson's Bay Company and named after Prince Rupert, the first governor of the Company. It comprised the territory in the drainage basin of Hudson Bay, roughly corresponding to what is now Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Yukon, Alberta, and the southern part of the Northwest Territories. It ceased to exist in 1870, when the land was purchased from the Hudson's Bay Company by Canada, although the name is still used for an ecclesiastical diocese.

Rushdie /ˈrʌʃdɪ, ˈrʊʃ-/, (Ahmed) Salman (b.1947), Indian-born British novelist. He was educated in England and became a British citizen in 1964. His work is chiefly associated with magic realism; his Booker Prize-winning novel Midnight's Children (1981) views the development of India since independence through the eyes of a telepathic child. His later novel The Satanic Verses (1988), with its portrayal of a figure that many identified with Muhammad, was regarded by Muslims as blasphemous; in 1989 Ayatollah Khomeini issued a fatwa condemning Rushdie to death, and Rushdie lived in hiding until the Iranian government dissociated itself from the fatwa in 1998.

Ruskin /ˈrʌskɪn/, John (1819–1900), English art and social critic. His prolific writings profoundly influenced 19th-century opinion and the development of the Labour movement. He was a champion of the painter J. M. W. Turner (at that time a controversial figure), the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, and of Gothic architecture, which (following Pugin) he saw as a religious expression of medieval piety. The Stones of Venice (1851–3), attacking Renaissance art, led on to later attacks on capitalism in his lectures 'The Political Economy of Art' (1857), and on utilitarianism in Unto This Last (1860). His Fors Clavigera (1871–8) or 'Letters to the Workmen and Labourers of Great Britain' was an attempt to spread his notions of social justice, coupled with aesthetic improvement. His religious and philanthropic instincts also expressed themselves in the founding of the Guild of St George in 1871, a major contribution to the Arts and Crafts Movement.

Russell^1 /ˈrʌs(ə)l/, Bertrand (Arthur William), 3rd Earl Russell (1872–1970), British philosopher, mathematician, and social reformer. His work on mathematical logic had great influence on symbolic logic and on set theory in mathematics; his major work in this field is Principia Mathematica (1910–13), written with A. N. Whitehead (see MATHEMATICAL LOGIC). Although his philosophical views underwent continual development and revision, he wrote several books in the empiricist tradition (e.g. Our Knowledge of the External World, 1914) and was a principal proponent of neutral monism (see MONISM) and of logical atomism. During the First World War Russell became widely known as a conscientious objector; he also campaigned for women's suffrage and later took a leading role in CND. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1950.

Russell^2 /ˈrʌs(ə)l/, George William (1867–1935), Irish poet. He met W. B. Yeats in 1886 and became interested in theosophy and mysticism; the first of several volumes of verse (published under the pseudonym AE) appeared in 1894. After the performance of his poetic drama Deirdre (1902) Russell became a leading figure in the Irish literary revival. His interests extended to public affairs and he edited The Irish Homestead (1905–23) and The Irish Statesman (1923–30).

Russell^3 /ˈrʌs(ə)l/, Henry Norris (1877–1957), American astronomer. He worked mainly in astrophysics and spectroscopy, and is best known for his independent discovery of the relationship between stellar magnitude and spectral type (see HERTZSPRUNG–RUSSELL DIAGRAM). He believed that this diagram represented a sequence of stellar evolution, a view no longer accepted. Russell carried out spectroscopic analyses to determine the constituent elements of stars, and he discovered that the sun contained much more hydrogen than had been expected.

Russell^4 /ˈrʌs(ə)l/, John, 1st Earl Russell (1792–1878), British Whig statesman, Prime Minister 1846–52 and 1865–6. As a member of Lord Grey's government (1830–4), he was responsible for introducing the Reform Bill of 1832 into Parliament. He became Prime Minister when Sir Robert Peel was defeated (1846) and later served as Foreign Secretary in Lord Aberdeen's coalition government (1852–4); Russell's second premiership ended with his resignation when his attempt to extend the franchise again in a further Reform Bill was unsuccessful.

Russia /ˈrʌʃə/ (official name Russian Federation) a country in northern Asia and eastern Europe; pop. (est. 1991) 148,930,000; official language, Russian; capital, Moscow. The modern state originated from the great expansion of the principality of Muscovy, under the Rurik and Romanov dynasties, into an empire stretching from the Arctic Ocean in the north to the Black Sea in the south and from the Baltic in the west to the Bering Strait in the east. Russia played an increasing role in Europe from the time of Peter the Great in the early 18th century, and pursued imperial ambitions in the East in the second half of the 19th century. Social and economic problems, exacerbated by the First World War, led to the overthrow of the tsar in the Russian Revolution of 1917. As the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic (RSFSR), Russia formed the largest of the constituent republics of the Soviet Union, with more than three-quarters of the area and over half of the population. On the breakup of the Soviet Union and the collapse of Communist control in 1991, Russia emerged as an independent state and a founder member of the Commonwealth of Independent States. A new federal treaty establishing the Russian Federation was signed in 1992 by the majority of the Russian republics and other territories. (See also SOVIET UNION.)

Russian Civil War a conflict fought in Russia (1918–21) after the Revolution, between the Bolshevik Red Army and the counter-revolutionary White Russians. Forces opposed to the Bolsheviks, led by army commanders, began armed resistance at the end of 1917 but were met by the Red Army hastily organized by Trotsky. Despite being aided by British, French, US, and Japanese forces, the White Russians were hampered by disunity and problems with communications; although revolts in Poland, Finland, and the Baltic states were successful, the Bolsheviks were ultimately victorious, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was established.

Russian Federation the official name for RUSSIA.

Russian Orthodox Church the national Church of Russia (see ORTHODOX CHURCH).

Russian Revolution the revolution in the Russian empire in 1917, in which the tsarist regime was overthrown and replaced by Bolshevik rule under Lenin. There were two phases to the Revolution: the first, in March (Old Style, February, whence February Revolution), was largely supported by the liberal Mensheviks; it was sparked off by food and fuel shortages during the First World War and began with strikes and riots in Petrograd (St Petersburg). The tsar was forced to abdicate, and a provisional government was set up. The second phase, in November 1917 (Old Style, October, whence October Revolution), was marked by the seizure of power by the Bolsheviks in a coup led by Lenin. After workers' councils or soviets took power in major cities, the new Soviet constitution was declared in 1918.

Russian Revolution of 1905 the uprising in Russia in 1905. Popular discontent, fuelled by heavy taxation and the country's defeat in the Russo-Japanese War, led to a peaceful demonstration in St Petersburg, which was fired on by troops. The crew of the battleship Potemkin mutinied and a soviet (or workers' council) was formed in St Petersburg, prompting Tsar Nicholas II to make a number of short-lived concessions including the formation of an elected legislative body or Duma.

Ruthenia /ruːˈθiːnɪə/ a region of eastern Europe on the southern slopes of the Carpathian Mountains, now forming the Transcarpathian region of western Ukraine. The region takes its name from the Ruthenes or Russniaks, a Slavonic people who were ancestors of the Ukrainians. Formerly part of the Austro-Hungarian empire, it was divided between Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Romania. Gaining independence for a single day in 1938, it was occupied by Hungary and in 1945 ceded to the Soviet Union, becoming part of Ukraine. □ Ruthenian adj. & n.

ruthenium /ruːˈθiːnɪəm/ n. a hard silvery-white metallic chemical element (atomic number 44; symbol Ru). A transition element and one of the platinum metals, ruthenium was isolated by the Russian chemist Karl (Karlovich) Klauss (1796–1864) in 1845. It is rare, occurring chiefly in platinum ores, and is used as a catalyst and in certain alloys. [med.L Ruthenia Russia (from its discovery in ores from the Urals)]

Rutherford^{1} /ˈrʌðəfəd/, Sir Ernest, 1st Baron Rutherford of Nelson (1871–1937), New Zealand physicist. He is regarded as the founder of nuclear physics, and worked mainly in Britain. He established the nature of alpha and beta particles, and (with Frederick Soddy) proposed the laws of radioactive decay. He later concluded that the positive charge in an atom, and virtually all its mass, is concentrated in a central nucleus, with negatively charged electrons in orbit round it. In 1919 Rutherford announced the first artificial transmutation of matter – he had changed nitrogen atoms into oxygen by bombarding them with alpha particles. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1908.

Rutherford^{2} /ˈrʌðəfəd/, Dame Margaret (1892–1972), English actress. She is chiefly remembered for her roles as a formidable but jovial eccentric; they include Miss Prism in The Importance of Being Earnest, which she played on stage in 1939 and on film in 1952. Among her other films are Passport to Pimlico (1949), several film versions of Agatha Christie novels in which she played Miss Marple, and The VIPs (1963), for which she won an Oscar.

Rwanda /ruːˈændə/ a landlocked country in central Africa, to the north of Burundi and the south of Uganda; pop. (est. 1991) 7,403,000; official languages, Rwanda (a Bantu language) and French; capital, Kigali. Inhabited largely by Hutu and Tutsi peoples, the area was claimed by Germany from 1890, and after the First World War became part of a Belgian trust territory; as in Burundi, the country was ruled by the Belgians through the minority Tutsi kings. Rwanda became independent as a republic in 1962, shortly after the violent overthrow of the monarchy by the majority Hutu people. In 1990 an army of Tutsi exiles invaded the country from Uganda, and in 1991 a new multi-party system was introduced in response to the rebels' demands for greater democracy. International attention became focused on the country in April 1994 following the death in a plane crash of the President, together with the President of Burundi. Up to 500,000 people, largely Tutsis, were slaughtered by predominantly Hutu supporters of the government, and over a million fled as refugees into Zaire and neighbouring countries. The Tutsi-dominated Rwandan Patriotic Front took power as the new government. □ Rwandan adj. & n.

Ryle^{1} /raɪl/, Gilbert (1900–76), English philosopher. He was professor of metaphysical philosophy at Oxford (1945–68) and did much to make Oxford a leading centre for philosophical research. He was a prominent figure in the linguistic school of philosophy and held that philosophy should identify 'the sources in linguistic idioms of recurrent misconstructions and absurd theories'. His most famous work, The Concept of Mind (1949), is a strong attack on the mind-and-body dualism of Descartes. He was a cousin of the astronomer Sir Martin Ryle.

Ryle^{2} /raɪl/, Sir Martin (1918–84), English astronomer. He carried out pioneering work in radio astronomy in the 1950s, when he produced the first detailed sky map of radio sources. His demonstration that remote objects appeared to be different from closer ones helped to establish the big bang as opposed to the steady-state theory of the universe. Ryle was Astronomer Royal 1972–82 and was awarded the Nobel Prize for physics in 1974, the first astronomer to be so honoured. He was a cousin of the philosopher Gilbert Ryle.

- The original Christian ideal of the saint was the martyr, largely replaced, after persecution ceased in the 4th century, by the devout member of a religious order. A saint in this context is a person who is close to God and can intercede with God on behalf of other Christians, and one through whom divine power is therefore manifest. A cult of the saints, focused on their physical remains, has early attestation (e.g. that of Polycarp, 2nd century), and developed rapidly from the 4th century onwards. Procedures for the approval of such veneration (called canonization) were gradually formalized, being eventually vested in the papacy in the West and episcopal synods in the East: performance of miracles and lives of heroic sanctity are the criteria for canonization. At the Reformation the cult of the saints was attacked as blurring the unique status of Christ and as an occasion of religious commercialization. The persecution of Christians in some countries in the 20th century to an extent reinforced the early association of sanctity with martyrdom.

Sassoon^1 /səˈsuːn/, Siegfried (Lorraine) (1886–1967), English poet and writer. He is known for his starkly realistic poems written while serving in the First World War, expressing his contempt for war leaders and what he regarded as patriotic cant, as well as compassion for his comrades; collections include The Old Huntsman (1917). While in hospital in 1917 he met and gave encouragement to the poet Wilfred Owen; he published Owen's poems in 1920. After the war he also wrote a number of semi-autobiographical novels, including Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man (1928).

Sassoon^2 /səˈsuːn/, Vidal (b.1928), English hairstylist. After opening a London salon in 1953, he introduced the cut and blow-dry. Ten years later he created a hairstyle that was short at the back and long at the sides; first modelled at a Mary Quant fashion show, it became known as the 'Sassoon Cut'.

▪ The first artificial satellite, Sputnik I, was launched by the USSR on 4 Oct. 1957. However, the idea had been put forward much earlier, as by Jules Verne in Begum's Fortune (tr. 1880). The concept of the communications satellite was outlined by Arthur C. Clarke in 1945, twenty years before the first one was launched. Over 5,000 satellites have since been launched into earth orbit and several hundred are still operational. Many of them provide observation or remote sensing of the earth's surface, for military or meteorological purposes, or for research into mineral resources, land-use, etc. Others act as relays for telephone and microwave communications, or for the broadcasting of television and radio, or provide precise coordinates for air, sea, and land navigation. A number of satellites carry instruments for astronomical observation at various electromagnetic wavelengths, unhindered by the earth's atmosphere.

Satie /ˈsɑːtɪ/, Erik (Alfred Leslie) (1866–1925), French composer. He formed the centre of an irreverent avant-garde artistic set, associated not only with the composers of Les Six, but also with Cocteau, Dadaism, and surrealism. Many of his works are short and have facetious titles: Three Pieces in the Shape of a Pear (1903), for example, is in fact a set of six pieces. One of his few large-scale works is the symphonic drama Socrate (1918) for four sopranos and chamber orchestra to a libretto based on the writings of Plato. His work influenced Debussy and the development of minimalism.

Saussure /səʊˈsjʊə(r)/, Ferdinand de (1857–1913), Swiss linguistics scholar. He is one of the founders of modern linguistics and his work is fundamental to the development of structuralism. Departing from traditional diachronic studies of language, he emphasized the importance of a synchronic approach, treating language as a system of mutually dependent and interacting signs. He also made a distinction between langue (the total system of language) and parole (individual speech acts), and stressed that linguistic study should focus on the former. In his lifetime he published works of fundamental importance for Indo-European studies, but his most influential work, Cours de linguistique générale (1916), was compiled from lecture-notes and published posthumously. (See also STRUCTURALISM.)

Savage /ˈsævɪdʒ/, Michael Joseph (1872–1940), New Zealand Labour statesman, Prime Minister 1935–40. He was born in Australia and, after working as a trade union organizer, moved to New Zealand in 1907 and joined the New Zealand Labour Party on its formation in 1916, becoming party leader in 1933. Two years later his party won the general election and Savage became New Zealand's first Labour Prime Minister, a position he held until his death. He introduced many reforms, including social security legislation which he dubbed 'applied Christianity'.

Savery /ˈseɪvərɪ/, Thomas (known as 'Captain Savery') (*c.*1650–1715), English engineer. He took out a number of patents, notably one for an engine to raise water 'by the Impellent Force of Fire' (1698). It was described as being suitable for raising water from mines, supplying towns with water, and operating mills. In fact its use of high-pressure steam made it dangerous, and only a few were actually used (at low pressure) in water mills. However, Savery's patent covered the type of engine developed by Thomas Newcomen, who was therefore obliged to join him in its exploitation.

Schiaparelli^1 /ˌskjæpəˈrelɪ/, Elsa (1896–1973), Italian-born French fashion designer. She settled in Paris and opened her own establishment in the late 1920s. She introduced padded shoulders to her garments in 1932, and the vivid shade now known as 'shocking pink' in 1947. Her fashions also included touches of the surreal, drawing inspiration from artists such as Salvador Dali. She later expanded her interests into ready-to-wear fashions and ranges of perfume and cosmetics.

Schiaparelli^2 /ˌskjæpəˈrelɪ/, Giovanni Virginio (1835–1910), Italian astronomer. He studied the nature of cometary tails, and showed that many meteors are derived from comets and follow similar orbits. He observed Mars in detail, identifying the southern polar ice cap and features which he termed 'seas', 'continents', and 'channels' (canali). The last was mistranslated by Percival Lowell as 'canals', beginning a long-running controversy about intelligent life on Mars (see CANAL 3).

Schiele /ˈʃiːlə/, Egon (1890–1918), Austrian painter and draughtsman. He joined the Vienna Academy of Fine Arts in 1906 but left in 1909 because his teacher disapproved of his paintings, which were influenced by Gustav Klimt and art nouveau. From 1910 onwards he evolved a distinctive expressionist style, characterized by an aggressive linear energy and a neurotic intensity, reflecting his interest in the work of Sigmund Freud; his paintings and drawings (often self-portraits) depicted distorted, frequently emaciated bodies with an explicit erotic content, which resulted in him being imprisoned for a month in 1911. His pictures received international acclaim at the exhibition of the Vienna Secession in 1918; Schiele died in the same year of Spanish influenza.

Schiller /ˈʃɪlə(r)/, (Johann Christoph) Friedrich von (1759–1805), German dramatist, poet, historian, and critic. His early work was influenced by the Sturm und Drang movement; his mature work established him as a major figure, with Goethe (with whom he formed a long-standing friendship from 1794 until his death), of the Enlightenment in Germany. His first major work was the historical drama in blank verse Don Carlos (1787). His other historical plays include the trilogy Wallenstein (1800), which drew on his historical studies of the Thirty Years War, Mary Stuart (1800), and William Tell (1804). These works are concerned with freedom and responsibility, whether political, personal, or moral. Among his best-known poems are 'Ode to Joy', which Beethoven set to music in his Ninth Symphony, and 'The Artists' (both written *c.*1787). His many essays on aesthetics include On Naive and Reflective Poetry (1795–6), in which he contrasts his poetry with that of Goethe.

schilling /'ʃɪlɪŋ/ n. the chief monetary unit of Austria until the introduction of the euro in 2002. [G (as SHILLING)]

Schindler /'ʃɪndlə(r)/, Oskar (1908–74), German industrialist. In 1940 he established a lucrative enamelware factory in Cracow, Poland, employing Jewish workers from the city's ghetto. After the Nazi evacuation of the ghetto in 1943, Schindler exercised his financial and political influence to protect his employees from being sent to Plaszów, a nearby labour camp. In 1944 he compiled a list of more than 1,200 Jews from Plaszów and his own factory to be relocated at a new armaments factory in Czechoslovakia, thereby saving them from certain death in concentration camps. Schindler's life and role in rescuing Polish Jews are celebrated in the novel Schindler's Ark (1982), by Thomas Keneally, and the film Schindler's List (1993), directed by Steven Spielberg.

Schliemann /'ʃliːmən/, Heinrich (1822–90), German archaeologist. A former businessman with an amateur interest in archaeology, he was determined to discover the location of the ancient city of Troy, and in 1871 began excavating the mound of Hissarlik on the NE Aegean coast of Turkey. He discovered the remains of a succession of nine cities on the site, identifying the second oldest as Homer's Troy (and romantically naming a hoard of jewellery 'Priam's Treasure'), although he had in fact uncovered a pre-Homeric site. He subsequently undertook significant excavations at Mycenae (1876) and at other sites in mainland Greece.

Schoenberg /'ʃɜːnbɜːg/, Arnold (1874–1951), Austrian-born American composer and music theorist. His major contribution to modernism is his development of the concepts of atonality and serialism. He introduced atonality into the final movement of his second string quartet (1907–8) and abolished the distinction between consonance and dissonance in his Three Piano Pieces (1909). From these experiments he evolved a serial system of composition (see SERIALISM); the third and fourth movements of the Serenade (1923) for seven instruments and bass voice are the first clear examples of this technique. He was a professor of music in Vienna and in Berlin until 1933 when, after condemnation of his music by Hitler, he emigrated to the US. He continued to develop his serial techniques and his work influenced composers such as his pupils Berg and Webern.

scholasticism /skəˈlæstɪˌsɪz(ə)m/ n. 1 the educational tradition of the medieval 'schools' or universities, especially a method of philosophical and theological speculation which aimed at a better understanding of Christianity. (See note below.) 2 narrow or unenlightened insistence on traditional doctrines etc.

- The theoretical foundations of scholasticism were laid by St Augustine and Boethius, who attempted to incorporate the thought of Plato and the Neoplatonists into Christian theology. Of decisive importance was the introduction of the works of Aristotle into western Europe in the 13th century. Among the most prominent figures of scholasticism were St Anselm, Abelard, Duns Scotus, and, most importantly, St Thomas Aquinas. The last major scholastic philosopher was William of Occam (d.1349); from his time scholasticism declined, although interest in it revived at the end of the 19th century.

Schopenhauer /ˈʃəʊp(ə)nˌhaʊə(r), ˈʃɒp-/, Arthur (1788–1860), German philosopher. His pessimistic philosophy is based on studies of Kant, Plato, and the Hindu Vedas, and is embodied in his principal work The World as Will and Idea (1819). According to this, the will (self-consciousness in man and the unconscious forces of nature) is the only reality; the material world is an illusion created by the will. This will is a malignant thing, which deceives us into reproducing and perpetuating life. Asceticism and chastity are the duty of humankind, with a view to terminating the evil; egoism, which manifests itself principally as 'the will to live', must be overcome. His theory of the predominance of the will influenced the development of Freudian psychoanalysis and, via Nietzsche, existentialism.

Schreiner /ˈʃraɪnə(r)/, Olive (Emilie Albertina) (1855–1920), South African novelist, short-story writer, and feminist. She worked as a governess, in 1881 moving to England, where she published her best-known novel The Story of an African Farm (1883), initially under the pseudonym Ralph Iron. The novel was both acclaimed and condemned for its heroine's unconventional approach to religion and marriage. Schreiner returned to South Africa in 1889, later becoming an active supporter of the women's suffrage movement and writing the influential Women and Labour (1911).

Schrödinger /ˈʃrɜːdɪŋə(r)/, Erwin (1887–1961), Austrian theoretical physicist. In the 1920s he founded the study of wave mechanics, deriving the equation whose roots define the energy levels of atoms. Professor of physics at Berlin from 1927, Schrödinger left Germany after the Nazis came to power in 1933, returning to Austria in 1936 but fleeing again after the Anschluss of 1938 and finally settling in Dublin. He wrote a number of general works, including What is Life? (1944), which proved influential among scientists of all disciplines. He shared the Nobel Prize for physics in 1933.

Schrödinger equation n. Physics a differential equation used in quantum mechanics for the wave function of a particle. [SCHRÖDINGER]

Schubert /ˈʃuːbət/, Franz (1797–1828), Austrian composer. While his music is associated with the romantic movement for its lyricism and emotional intensity, it belongs in formal terms to the classical age of Haydn and Mozart. During his brief life he produced more than 600 songs, nine symphonies, fifteen string quartets, and twenty-one piano sonatas, as well as operas and church music. One of his most important contributions to music was as the foremost composer of German lieder; works include the songs 'Gretchen am Spinnrade' (1814) and 'Erlkönig' (1815; 'Erl-King'), in addition to such song cycles as Die Schöne Müllerin (1823) and Winterreise (1827). Among his other significant works are the String Quintet in C major (1828), the 'Trout' piano quintet, and the Ninth Symphony ('the Great C Major').

Schulz /ʃʊlts/, Charles (1922–2000), American cartoonist. He created the 'Peanuts' comic strip (originally entitled 'Li'l Folks') featuring a range of characters including the boy Charlie Brown and the dog Snoopy. The comic strip was first published in 1950 after Schulz sold the rights to United Features Syndicate, and it later appeared in many publications around the world.

Schumacher /ˈʃuːˌmæxə(r)/, E(rnst) F(riedrich) (1911–77), German economist and conservationist. His reputation is chiefly based on his book Small is Beautiful: Economics as if People Mattered (1973), which argues that economic growth is a false god of Western governments and industrialists, and that mass production needs to be replaced by smaller, more energy-efficient enterprises. Schumacher also worked to encourage conservation of natural resources and supported the development of intermediate technology in developing countries.

Schumann /ˈʃuːmən/, Robert (Alexander) (1810–56), German composer. He was a leading romantic composer and is particularly noted for his songs and piano music. He drew much of his inspiration from literature, writing incidental music for Byron's Manfred (1849) and setting to music poems by Heinrich Heine and Robert Burns. Notable among his piano pieces are the miniatures Papillons (1829–31), Carnaval (1834–5), and Waldszenen (1848–9), the Fantasy in C major (1836), and the Piano Concerto in A minor (1845). His other works include four symphonies and much chamber music. He spent the last two years of his life in a mental asylum.

Schütz /ʃʊts/, Heinrich (1585–1672), German composer and organist. He is regarded as the first German baroque composer and his work reflects the influence of periods spent in Italy, for example in the settings of Psalms of David (1619). He composed much church music and what is thought to have been the first German opera (Dafne, 1627; now lost). His three settings of the Passion story represent a turning towards a simple meditative style, eschewing instrumental accompaniment and relying on voices alone.

Schwäbisch Gmünd /ˌʃveɪbɪʃ gəˈmʊnt/ a city in SW Germany, situated to the east of Stuttgart; pop. (1983) 56,400.

Schwann /ʃvæn, ʃwɒn/, Theodor Ambrose Hubert (1810–82), German physiologist. He is chiefly remembered for his support of cell theory, showing that animals (as well as plants) are made up of individual cells, and that the egg begins life as a single cell. He also isolated the first animal enzyme, pepsin, recognized that fermentation is caused by processes in the yeast cells, and discovered the cells forming the myelin sheaths of nerve fibres (Schwann cells). Schwann became disillusioned following criticism of his work by chemists, emigrated to Belgium at the age of 28, and withdrew from scientific work.

Schwarzkopf /ˈʃvɔːtskɒpf/, Dame (Olga Maria) Elisabeth (Friederike) (b.1915), German operatic soprano. She made her début in Berlin in 1942, and went on to become especially famous for her recitals of German lieder and for her roles in works by Richard Strauss such as Der Rosenkavalier.

He decided to devote the first thirty years of his life to learning and music and the remainder to the service of others. His main contribution to theology was his book The Quest for the Historical Jesus (1906), which emphasized the importance of understanding Jesus within the context of the Jewish apocalyptic thought of his day. In 1913 he qualified as a doctor and went as a missionary to Lambaréné in French Equatorial Africa (now Gabon), where he established a hospital and lived for most of the rest of his life. He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1952.

science fiction n. (abbr. SF) a genre of fiction based on imagined future technological or scientific advances, major environmental or social changes, etc., and frequently portraying space or time travel and life on other planets. Science fiction emerged in the late 19th century in the works of writers such as Jules Verne and H. G. Wells, although there are earlier precedents, such as Mary Shelley's Frankenstein (1818). Following the First World War there was an upsurge in science-fiction writing in Britain and the US. It was during this period that the very popular science-fiction 'pulp' magazines became established, such as those of the US writer and publisher Hugo Gernsback (1884–1967), who was responsible for popularizing the term 'science fiction'. After the dystopian visions of George Orwell, Aldous Huxley, and Isaac Asimov, the period after the Second World War produced writers such as Ray Bradbury, Kurt Vonnegut, and Philip K. Dick (1928–82) in the US; in Britain in the 1960s writers associated with the magazine New Worlds, such as Michael Moorcock (b.1939) and J. G. Ballard (b.1930), introduced apocalyptic themes and political radicalism. Films such as 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968) and Star Wars (1977), together with television series such as Dr Who (from 1963) and Star Trek (from 1966), have helped to bring popular science fiction to a wider audience. In the 1980s a new genre, called cyberpunk, emerged, bringing writers such as William Gibson (b.1948) to prominence.

Scipio Aemilianus /ˌsɪpɪəʊ iːˌmɪlɪ'ɑːnəs/ (full name Publius Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus Africanus Minor) (*c.*185–129 BC), Roman general and politician. He achieved distinction in the third Punic War, and blockaded and destroyed Carthage in 146. His successful campaign in Spain (133) ended organized resistance in that country. Returning to Rome in triumph, he initiated moves against the reforms introduced by his brother-in-law Tiberius Gracchus. Scipio's sudden death at the height of the crisis gave rise to the rumour that he had been murdered.

Scipio Africanus /ˌsɪpɪəʊ ˌæfrɪ'kɑːnəs/ (full name Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus Major) (236–*c.*184 BC), Roman general and politician. His aggressive tactics were successful in concluding the second Punic War, firstly by the defeat of the Carthaginians in Spain in 206 and then by the defeat of Hannibal in Africa in 202; his victories pointed the way to Roman hegemony in the Mediterranean. His son was the adoptive father of Scipio Aemilianus.

Scoticism var. of SCOTTICISM.

Scoticize var. of SCOTTICIZE.

Scotland /'skɒtlənd/ a country forming the northernmost part of Great Britain and of the United Kingdom; pop. (1991) 4,957,300; capital, Edinburgh. Much of Scotland is mountainous, especially the Highlands in the north and north-west; the lowlands between the Clyde and Forth estuaries form the most populous region. Scotland was sparsely populated until Celtic peoples arrived from the Continent during the Bronze and early Iron Age. It was never fully subjugated by the Romans; Hadrian's Wall marked the Roman frontier except for a period during the 2nd century, when the Antonine Wall was built. An independent country in the Middle Ages, after the unification of various kingdoms of Scots, Picts, and Anglo-Saxons between the 9th and 11th centuries, Scotland successfully resisted English attempts at domination but was finally amalgamated with her southern neighbour as a result of the union of the Crowns in 1603 and of the Parliaments in 1707. The distinctive Celtic society of the Highlands, based on clans, continued to exist until it was destroyed in the aftermath of the Jacobite uprisings of 1715 and 1745–6 and the Highland clearances of the 18th–19th centuries. Scottish Gaelic is still spoken in the more remote parts of the north and west. Scotland's economy benefited in the 20th century from the discovery of North Sea oil. In 1997 the Scots voted in favour of a devolved parliament, inaugurated in 2000.

Scotland Yard 1 the headquarters of the London Metropolitan Police, situated from 1829 to 1890 in Great Scotland Yard, a short street off Whitehall in London, from 1890 until 1967 in New Scotland Yard on the Thames Embankment, and from 1967 in New Scotland Yard, Westminster. 2 the Criminal Investigation Department of the London Metropolitan Police force.

Scott^{1} /skɒt/, Sir George Gilbert (1811–78), English architect. Influenced by Pugin, he was a prolific Gothic revivalist, designing or restoring many churches, cathedrals, and other buildings. He attracted controversy for his restoration of medieval churches and in 1858 came into conflict with Palmerston over the design for the new Foreign Office, where Scott was ultimately compelled to adopt an Italianate solution; his Albert Memorial in London (1863–72) reflects more accurately his preferred aesthetic. His grandson Sir Giles Gilbert Scott (1880–1960) also worked as a revivalist architect and is best known for the Gothic Anglican cathedral in Liverpool (begun in 1904, completed in 1978).

Scott^{2} /skɒt/, Sir Peter Markham (1909–89), English naturalist and artist. He was particularly interested in wildfowl and their conservation, and in 1946 founded the Wildfowl Trust at Slimbridge in Gloucestershire. He was well known as a wildfowl artist and a presenter of natural history programmes on television, and he became increasingly involved in conservation worldwide. He was also an accomplished yachtsman, and maintained an interest in the search for a monster at Loch Ness. He was the son of the explorer Sir Robert Scott.

Scott^{3} /skɒt/, Sir Robert (Falcon) (1868–1912), English explorer and naval officer. As commander of the ship Discovery he led the National Antarctic Expedition (1900–4), surveying the interior of the continent and charting the Ross Sea. On a second expedition (1910–12) Scott and four companions made a journey to the South Pole by sled, arriving there in Jan. 1912 to discover that the Norwegian explorer Amundsen had beaten them to their goal by a month. Scott and his companions died on the journey back to base, and their bodies and diaries were discovered by a search party eight months later. Scott, a national hero, was posthumously knighted. He was the father of the naturalist and artist Sir Peter Scott.

Scott^{4} /skɒt/, Sir Walter (1771–1832), Scottish novelist and poet. He established the form of the historical novel in Britain, and was also influential in his treatment of rural themes and use of regional speech. Among his novels are Waverley (1814), Old Mortality (1816), Ivanhoe (1819), and Kenilworth (1821). His poetry was influenced by medieval French and Italian poetry, and by contemporary German poets; he collected and imitated old Borders tales and ballads, while among his original works are the romantic narrative poems The Lay of the Last Minstrel (1805) and The Lady of the Lake (1810).

▪ The principle of the screw was used by the ancient Greeks in a water-raising device (see Archimedean screw), and from the 1st century AD for exerting pressure in wine and olive presses. As fasteners, metal screws and nuts appeared in the 16th century, turned with a box-wrench or (sometimes) a pronged device. The metal screw for fixing various materials to wood is described by a German mining engineer of the mid-16th century, but may have been already in use for some time. The screwdriver as a hand-tool appears from *c.*1800, and in this century other kinds of screws turned by Allen keys or Phillips screwdrivers have been developed.

Second Republic hist. 1 the republican regime in France from the deposition of King Louis Philippe in 1848 to the beginning of the Second Empire (1852). 2 this period in France.

Second World War (1939–45), a war in which the Axis Powers (Germany, Italy, and Japan) were defeated by an alliance eventually including the United Kingdom (and its dominions), the Soviet Union, and the United States. War began in Europe when Hitler's invasion of Poland in September 1939 led Great Britain and France to declare war on Germany. In the following summer France was defeated and occupied; although British forces had been driven to retreat from Dunkirk, Britain (with Winston Churchill now as Prime Minister) remained in the war, defeating the German air force in the Battle of Britain. But soon Germany had overrun much of Europe, including France, the Low Countries, Norway, Denmark, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Poland, and fighting had spread to the Mediterranean and North Africa after Italy joined the war (1940). In June 1941 Hitler launched an initially successful offensive against the Soviet Union, although Stalin had previously signed a non-aggression pact and colluded in the occupation of Poland and other countries. The war embroiled the US (already supplying Britain with arms and other aid) and spread to the Far East and Pacific in December 1941; Japan, in dispute with the US over trade embargoes, attacked the US fleet at Pearl Harbor and overran much of SE Asia and the western Pacific, including Indo-China, Burma, Malaya, Indonesia, and the Philippines. In 1942–3 the Allies achieved strategically decisive victories over Germany at Stalingrad, Kursk, and El Alamein, and over Japan at Midway and in the Solomons, and from this time the Allies were on the offensive. Italy surrendered after the loss of Sicily (1943), and the Allies launched a full-scale invasion in Normandy in June 1944. The war in Europe ended when Germany, invaded from east and west, surrendered (May 1945) shortly after Hitler's suicide. Japan, facing invasion, surrendered after the US dropped atom bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki in August 1945. An estimated 55 million people were killed during the war, a much higher proportion of them civilians than in the First World War. At least 6 million Jews and other members of persecuted minorities were systematically exterminated by Nazi Germany (see HOLOCAUST, THE). Other features of the war were the heavy bombing of civilian targets (particularly by the Allies), the use of unrestricted submarine warfare by Germany, and the introduction of new technology such as radar, rockets, jet aircraft, and nuclear weapons. The US and the Soviet Union emerged from the war as rival superpowers, and the immediate postwar period saw extensive redrawing of frontiers, especially in Europe, and the beginning of the cold war.

semiconductor /ˌsemɪkən'dʌktə(r)/ n. a solid substance that is a non-conductor when pure or at a low temperature but has a conductivity between that of insulators and that of most metals when containing a suitable impurity or at a higher temperature. Modern electronics now relies principally upon devices made of semiconductors such as silicon and germanium. The importance of semiconductors lies in the fact that, in comparison with metals, their conductivity is much more sensitive to factors such as heat, light, applied voltage, and traces of impurities, meaning that the performance of transistors and other semiconductor devices can be very precisely controlled. The latter is a prerequisite in the creation of electronic circuits that are able to process complicated information, as in a computer.

▪ The term semiotics is used to denote the study of systems of signs and symbols in the broadest sense, as opposed to semantics, which is used, more narrowly, with reference to the meaning of specifically linguistic and logical signs and symbols. Semiotics includes the study of the meanings assigned to non-arbitrary signs such as the weather, animal behaviour, and medical symptoms, as well as cultural systems such as music, food, dress, painting, and language. Much of the terminology of both semiotics and semantics was invented by the American logician C. S. Peirce. Semioticians such as Umberto Eco have also attempted to devise a general theory of semiotics for the analysis of human cultures and behaviour.

Semmelweis /ˈzem(ə)lˌvaɪs/, Ignaz Philipp (born Ignác Fülöp Semmelweis) (1818–65), Hungarian obstetrician, who spent most of his working life in Vienna. He discovered the infectious character of puerperal fever, at the time a major cause of death following childbirth. Semmelweis demonstrated that the infection was transmitted by the hands of doctors who examined patients after working in the dissecting room, and advocated rigorous cleanliness and the use of antiseptics. Despite the spectacular results obtained by Semmelweis, R. K. Virchow and other senior figures opposed his views for many years, and his involvement in events in Vienna during the 1848 revolution hindered his career.

Seneca¹ /ˈsenɪkə/, Lucius Annaeus (known as Seneca the Younger) (*c.*4 BC–AD 65), Roman statesman, philosopher, and dramatist. Born in Spain, he was the son of Seneca the Elder. He was banished to Corsica by Claudius in 41, charged with adultery; in 49 his sentence was repealed and he became tutor to Nero, through the influence of Nero's mother and Claudius' wife, Agrippina. Seneca was a dominant figure in the early years of Nero's reign and was appointed consul in 57; he retired in 62. His subsequent implication in a plot on Nero's life led to his forced suicide. As a philosopher, he expounded the ethics of Stoicism in such works as Epistulae Morales. Seneca wrote nine plays, whose lurid violence and use of rhetoric later influenced Elizabethan and Jacobean tragedy.

Seneca^{2} /ˈsenɪkə/, Marcus (or Lucius) Annaeus (known as Seneca the Elder) (*c.*55 BC–c. AD 39), Roman rhetorician, born in Spain. He was the father of Seneca the Younger. Septuagint /ˈseptjʊəˌdʒɪnt/ a Greek version of the Old Testament (Hebrew Bible) including the Apocrypha, made for the use of Jewish communities in Egypt whose native language was Greek. It derives its name from the tradition that it was the work of about seventy translators who worked in separate cells, each translating the whole, and whose versions were found to be identical, thereby showing the work to be divinely inspired. Internal evidence suggests that the work was produced by a number of translators in the 3rd and 2nd centuries BC. The early Christian Church, whose language was Greek, used the Septuagint as its Bible, and it is still the standard version of the Old Testament in the Greek Orthodox Church. Serb /sɜːb/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a native or national of Serbia. 2 a person of Serbian descent. ● adj. = SERBIAN adj. [Serbian Srb]

Serbia /ˈsɜːbɪə/ a republic in the Balkans; pop. (1986) 9,660,000; official language, Serbo-Croat; capital, Belgrade. An independent kingdom as early as the 6th century, Serbia was conquered by the Turks in the 14th century, but with the decline of Ottoman power the Serbs pressed for independence, which was regained in 1878. Serbian ambitions to found a South Slav nation state brought rivalry with the Austro-Hungarian empire and contributed to the outbreak of the First World War. Despite early successes against the Austrians, Serbia was occupied by the Central Powers and was absorbed into the new state of Yugoslavia after the end of hostilities. With the secession of four out of the six Yugoslav republics in 1991–2, Serbia struggled to retain the viability of Yugoslavia (of which it remains, with Montenegro, a constituent). It was involved in armed conflict with neighbouring Croatia, the civil war in Bosnia, and the suppression of Albanian nationalism in Kosovo.

Seven Wonders of the World the seven most spectacular man-made structures of the ancient world. Traditionally they comprise (1) the pyramids of Egypt, especially those at Giza; (2) the Hanging Gardens of Babylon; (3) the Mausoleum of Halicarnassus (see MAUSOLEUM); (4) the temple of Artemis at Ephesus in Asia Minor, rebuilt in 356 BC; (5) the Colossus of Rhodes; (6) the huge ivory and gold statue of Zeus at Olympia in the Peloponnese, made by Phidias *c.*430 BC; (7) the Pharos of Alexandria (or in some lists, the walls of Babylon). The earliest extant list of these dates from the 2nd century BC.

Seven Years War a war (1756–63) which ranged Britain, Prussia, and Hanover against Austria, France, Russia, Saxony, Sweden, and Spain. Its main issues were the struggle between Britain and France for supremacy overseas, and that between Prussia and Austria for the domination of Germany. After some early setbacks, the British made substantial gains over France abroad, capturing (under James Wolfe) French Canada and (under Robert Clive) undermining French influence in India. On the Continent, the war was most notable for the brilliant campaigns of Frederick the Great of Prussia against converging enemy armies. The war was ended by the Treaties of Paris and Hubertusburg in 1763, leaving Britain the supreme European naval and colonial power and Prussia in an appreciably stronger position than before in central Europe.

- Sewers were known in the ancient world: the earliest that survives is at Mohenjo-Daro in the Indus valley (*c.*2500 BC), and there were elaborate domestic arrangements at the Palace of Minos in Crete (*c.*2000 BC). Many Roman cities had underground sewers, but after the decline of Roman power these were allowed to deteriorate. In medieval Europe there was no proper drainage system and the water-supply was inadequate and insanitary, with the consequence that disease was rife. When the Industrial Revolution swelled the numbers of people living in towns it became essential to devise a system of waste-disposal; the first underground sewers were constructed at Hamburg in Germany in 1843.

The earliest patents were taken out in England by Charles Weisenthal in 1755 and Thomas Saint in 1790, and the first chain-stitch sewing machine was invented in 1829 by Barthélemy Thimonnier, a French tailor. In 1846 the American inventor Elias Howe patented a machine producing a lock stitch; this was developed by Isaac Singer into the first commercially successful machine. It used a needle carrying a loop of thread through the fabric from above and interlocking with a second thread running beneath the fabric on a shuttle. Modern machines, while electrically powered and offering a range of stitches and automatic functions, still operate in the same basic way.

Shaker /ˈʃeɪkə(r)/ n. (fem. Shakeress /-rɪs/) a member of a US Christian sect, the United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Coming, whose adherents live austerely in celibate mixed communities. Named from the ecstatic whirling and shaking engaged in by its members, the sect developed in England *c.*1750 among a branch of the Quakers and was taken to America in 1774 by Ann Lee (1736–84), who regarded herself as the second incarnation of Christ. The community that was established prospered and spread in New England, and its members gained a reputation as skilled craftsmen, known for the elegant functionalism of their traditional furniture, interest in which has recently revived. Because of its doctrine of celibacy and hence its dependence on recruitment from the wider society, Shakerism has few adherents today. □ Shakerism n.

Shakespeare /ˈʃeɪkspɪə(r)/, William (also known as 'the Bard (of Avon)') (1564–1616), English dramatist. He was born a merchant's son in Stratford-upon-Avon in Warwickshire and married Anne Hathaway in about 1582. Some time thereafter he went to London, where he pursued a career as an actor, poet, and dramatist. He probably began to write for the stage in the late 1580s; although his plays were widely performed in his lifetime, many were not printed until the First Folio of 1623. His plays are written mostly in blank verse and include comedies (e.g. A Midsummer Night's Dream and As You Like It); historical plays, including Richard III and Henry V; the Greek and Roman plays, which include Julius Caesar and Antony and Cleopatra; the so-called 'problem plays', enigmatic comedies which include All's Well that Ends Well and Measure for Measure; the great tragedies, Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth; and the group of tragicomedies with which he ended his career, such as The Winter's Tale and The Tempest. He also wrote more than 150 sonnets, published in 1609, as well as narrative poems such as The Rape of Lucrece (1594).

Shia /'ʃiːə/ n. & adj. (also Shiah) ● n. the smaller of the two main branches of Islam (the other being Sunni), found esp. in Iran. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to Shia. [Arab. šīʽa party (of Ali)]

- The adherents of Shia (Shiites) differ from the Sunni Muslims in their understanding of the Sunna and in their rejection of the first three Sunni caliphs and acceptance of Ali, Muhammad's son-in-law and the fourth caliph, as the Prophet's first true successor; Ali and his descendants are believed to form the line of true imams (successors to Muhammad). The Shia branch broke away after the killing of Ali's son Husayn at the battle of Karbala in AD 680. There are many Shia sects, defined according to which imam they believe to be the twelfth and final one, and also according to the nature and extent of the imam's authority. The twelfth imam, who disappeared in the late 9th century, is thought to have been forced into hiding by the repressive political rule of the majority community, and is expected to return and to triumph over injustice (see also MAHDI).

▪ The first boats were probably roughly constructed rafts made of logs or bundles of reeds, followed by canoes made from hollowed-out tree-trunks. Later, stem and stern pieces were fixed to a keel, with ribs to support the sides. Among the most ancient vessels known are a dugout canoe found at Pese in Holland (8th millennium BC), and an oared funeral ship buried beside the tomb of the Egyptian pharaoh Cheops (4th millennium BC). Early ships were propelled by sail, sometimes supplemented by oars. In the mid-19th century some wooden naval vessels were ironclad, eventually giving way to the steel that is now almost universal. Steamships evolved in the 19th century, using reciprocating steam engines and later steam turbines; these in turn have been replaced by turbocharged diesel engines or gas turbines. Modern ships are worked with small crews through extensive use of automatic control systems. It has been customary in the West to think of ships as feminine since at least the 16th century. (See also BOAT.)

▪ The use of shortened handwriting dates at least from ancient Roman times. In England systems were produced from the 16th century, based at first on the alphabet and then increasingly on phonetics, notably that of Samuel Taylor (1749–1811). The brevity and simplicity of his system attracted the attention of Sir Isaac Pitman, who devised his own method in 1837. Pitman's system is still widely used, though others are also common; in the US, that devised in 1888 by John R. Gregg (1867–1948) is the most popular. Shorthand writing has become less important with the increasing use of sound recording.

Shostakovich /ˌʃostə'kəʊvɪtʃ/, Dmitri (Dmitrievich) (1906–75), Russian composer. He was a prolific composer whose works include fifteen symphonies, operas, and many chamber works, although it is for the symphonies that he is most renowned. Shostakovich developed a highly personal style and, although he experimented with atonality and twelve-note techniques, his music always returned to a basic tonality. The failure of his music to conform to Soviet artistic ideology earned him official condemnation, especially during the Stalinist period. His later work, particularly the last symphonies, written after Stalin's death when the strictures on artistic freedom were less tight, became increasingly sombre and intense.

(See note below.) 2 the dark shadow or outline of a person or thing against a lighter background. ● v.tr. represent or (usu. in passive) show in silhouette. □ in silhouette seen or placed in outline. [Étienne de Silhouette (see below)]

- Silhouette painting is found in Egyptian and Greek art, but its main vogue was from the mid-18th to the mid-19th century, when such portraiture was popularized by neoclassical taste, until the introduction of photography relegated it to a position of curiosity value. The word comes from the name of the French author and politician Étienne de Silhouette (1709–67), an amateur maker of paper cut-outs.

silica /ˈsɪlɪkə/ n. silicon dioxide, a hard white refractory solid occurring as quartz etc. and as a principal constituent of sandstone and other rocks. □ silica gel hydrated silica in a hard granular hygroscopic form used as a desiccant. □ siliceous /sɪˈlɪʃəs/ adj. (also silicious). [L silex -icis flint, after alumina etc.]

silicate /ˈsɪlɪˌkeɪt, -kət/ n. Chem. 1 a salt or ester of silicic acid. 2 any of the many minerals etc. consisting of silica combined with metal oxides, forming a major component of the rocks of the earth's crust.

silicic /sɪˈlɪsɪk/ adj. Chem. of silicon or silica. □ silicic acid an oxyacid of silica, esp. a weakly acidic colloidal hydrated form of silica. [SILICA + -IC] silicify /sɪˈlɪsɪˌfaɪ/ v.t. (-ies, -ied) convert into or impregnate with silica. □ silicification /sɪˌlɪsɪfɪˈkeɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

silicon /ˈsɪlɪkən/ n. a non-metallic chemical element (atomic number 14; symbol Si). (See note below.) □ silicon carbide = CARBORUNDUM. silicon chip a silicon microchip. [L silex -icis flint (after carbon, boron), alt. of earlier silicium]

- Silicon was first isolated and described as an element by Berzelius in 1823. After oxygen, it is the most abundant element in the earth's crust; most rocks consist primarily of silica or silicates. Pure silicon can exist in a shiny dark grey crystalline form or as an amorphous powder. The element is used in some alloys but its great importance is in the electronics industry. As a semiconductor, it has largely replaced the chemically similar element germanium, used for the first transistors. Silicon compounds have for centuries been widely used: glass, pottery, and bricks are largely composed of silicate minerals.

silicone /ˈsɪlɪˌkəʊn/ n. a synthetic organic polymer containing silicon and oxygen, used in polishes, paints, lubricants, rubber, etc. Silicones, developed in the 1940s, are resistant to chemical attack and relatively insensitive to temperature changes; they have a chemical structure based on chains of alternating silicon and oxygen atoms. [SILICON + -ONE] silicosis /ˌsɪlɪˈkəʊsɪs/ n. lung fibrosis caused by the inhalation of dust containing silica. □ silicotic /-ˈkotɪk/ adj.

Silicon Valley n. an area with a high concentration of electronics industries, esp. the Santa Clara valley south-east of San Francisco.

siliqua /ˈsɪlɪkwə/ n. (also silique /sɪˈliːk/) (pl. siliquae /ˈsɪlɪˌkwiː/ or siliques /sɪˈliːks/) Bot. the long narrow seed-pod of a cruciferous plant. □ siliquose /ˈsɪlɪˌkwəʊz, -ˌkwəʊs/ adj. siliquous adj. [L, = pod] silk /sɪlk/ n. 1 a fine strong soft lustrous fibre produced by silkworms in making cocoons. 2 a similar fibre spun by some spiders etc. 3 a thread or cloth made from silk fibre. b a fine soft thread (embroidery silk). 4 (in pl.) kinds of silk cloth or garments made from it, esp. as worn by a jockey in a horse-owner's colours. 5 (in the UK) Queen's (or King's) Counsel, as having the right to wear a silk gown. 6 (attrib.) made of silk (silk blouse). 7 the silky styles of the female maize-flower. □ silk cotton kapok or a similar substance. silk-fowl a breed of fowl with a silky plumage. silk-gland a gland secreting the substance produced as silk. silk hat a tall cylindrical hat covered with silk plush. silk moth a large moth of the family Bombycidae or Saturniidae, the caterpillar of which spins a protective silken cocoon; esp. the adult of the silkworm. silk-screen printing = screen printing. take silk (in the UK) become a Queen's (or King's) Counsel. □ silklike adj. [OE sioloc, seolec (cf. ON silki) f. LL sericum neut. of L sericus f. seres f. Gk Sēres an oriental people]

silken /ˈsɪlkən/ adj. 1 made of silk. 2 wearing silk. 3 soft or lustrous as silk. 4 (of a person's manner etc.) suave or insinuating. [OE seolcen (as SILK)]

Silk Road (also Silk Route) an ancient caravan route linking Xian in central China with the eastern Mediterranean. Skirting the northern edge of the Taklimakan Desert and passing through Turkestan, it covered a distance of some 6,400 km (4,000 miles). It was established during the period of Roman rule in Europe, and took its name from the silk which was brought to the west from China. It was also the route by which Christianity spread to the East. A railway (completed in 1963) follows the Chinese part of the route, from Xian to Urumqi.

silkworm /ˈsɪlkwɜːm/ n. the caterpillar of the moth Bombyx mori, which spins a cocoon of silk and is bred commercially for this purpose. The silkworm had been domesticated in China by 3000 BC, the technology of their culture was fully documented by 1000 BC, and silk became a major trade with the West (see SILK ROAD). Silkworms are fed on the leaves of the white mulberry. Some other kinds of silkworm, especially the tussore, belong to the related family Saturniidae.

silky /ˈsɪlkɪ/ adj. (silkier, silkiest) 1 like silk in smoothness, softness, fineness, or lustre. 2 (of a person's manner etc.) suave, insinuating. □ silkily adv. silkiness n.

sill /sɪl/ n. (also (esp. Building) cill) 1 a shelf or slab of stone, wood, or metal at the foot of a window or doorway. 2 a horizontal timber at the bottom of a dock or lock entrance, against which the gates close. 3 Geol. a tabular sheet of igneous rock intruded between other rocks and parallel with their planar structure. [OE syll, sylle] sillabub var. of SYLLABUB.

sillimanite /ˈsɪlɪməˌnaɪt/ n. an aluminium silicate occurring in orthorhombic crystals or fibrous masses. [Benjamin Silliman, Amer. chemist (1779–1864)]

Sillitoe /ˈsɪlɪˌtəʊ/, Alan (b.1928), English writer. His fiction is notable for its depiction of working-class provincial life; his first novel Saturday Night and Sunday Morning (1958) describes the life of a dissatisfied young Nottingham factory worker, while the title story in The Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner (1959) portrays a rebellious Borstal boy. He has also published volumes of poetry, short stories, and plays.

- The Silurian lasted from about 438 to 408 million years ago, between the Ordovician and Devonian periods. The first land plants and the first true fish (with jaws) appeared during this period.

silva var. of SYLVA.

silvan var. of SYLVAN.

Silvanus /sɪlˈveɪnəs, sɪlˈvɑːnəs/ Rom. Mythol. an Italian woodland deity identified with Pan.

silver /ˈsɪlvə(r)/ n., adj., & v. ● n. 1 a precious shiny greyish-white metallic element (atomic number 47; symbol Ag). (See note below.) 2 the colour of silver. 3 silver or cupro-nickel coins. 4 esp. Sc. money. 5 silver vessels or implements, esp. cutlery. 6 household cutlery of any material. 7 = silver medal. ● adj. 1 made wholly or chiefly of silver. 2 coloured like silver. ● v. 1 tr. coat or plate with silver. 2 tr. provide (a mirror-glass) with a backing of tin amalgam etc. 3 tr. (of the moon or a white light) give a silvery appearance to. 4 a tr. turn (the hair) grey or white. b intr. (of the hair) turn grey or white. □ silver age a period regarded as inferior to a golden age, e.g. that of post-classical Latin literature in the early period of the Roman Empire. silver band Brit. a band playing silver-plated instruments. silver birch a common birch, Betula alba, with silvery bark. silver fern 1 a New Zealand tree fern, Cyathea dealbata. 2 a stylized silver fern leaf as an emblem of New Zealand. silver fir a fir of the genus Abies, with the undersides of its needles coloured silver. silver fox 1 an American red fox at a time when its fur is black with white tips. 2 such fur. silver gilt 1 gilded silver. 2 an imitation gilding of yellow lacquer over silver leaf. silver-grey a lustrous grey. silver jubilee 1 the 25th anniversary of a sovereign's accession. 2 any other 25th anniversary. silver Latin see LATIN. silver-leaf a fungal disease of fruit trees. silver lining a consolation or hopeful feature in misfortune. silver medal a silver-coloured medal, usu. awarded as second prize. silver nitrate a colourless solid (chem. formula: $AgNO_3$) that is soluble in water, formerly used in photography. silver paper 1 aluminium or occasionally tin foil. 2 a fine white tissue-paper for wrapping silver. silver plate vessels, spoons, etc., of copper etc. plated with silver. silver salmon = COHO. silver sand a fine pure sand used in gardening. silver screen (usu. prec. by the) motion pictures collectively. silver solder solder containing silver. silver spoon a sign of future prosperity. silver standard a system by which the value of a currency is defined in terms of silver, for which the currency may be exchanged. silver thaw the formation of a glassy coating of ice on the ground or an exposed surface by freezing rain or the refreezing of thawed ice. silver tongue eloquence. silver wedding the 25th anniversary of a wedding. [OE seolfor f. Gmc]

- A transition metal, silver is found in nature in the uncombined state as well as in ores. It has been used for jewellery and other ornaments since ancient times, and it is also used in coins, cutlery, the coatings of mirrors, and dental amalgams. A further use is in printed circuits, as silver is a very good electrical conductor. The metal is generally resistant to corrosion, but tarnishes in air through reaction with traces of hydrogen sulphide. Silver salts decompose when exposed to light, depositing metallic silver — a reaction that is the basis of photography. The symbol Ag is from the Latin argentum.

silverfish /'sɪlvəˌfɪʃ/ n. 1 a silvery bristletail of the order Thysanura; esp. Lepisma saccharina, found commonly in houses. 2 a silver-coloured fish, esp. a colourless variety of goldfish.

Simnel /'sɪmn(ə)l/, Lambert (*c.*1475–1525), English pretender and rebel. The son of a baker, he was trained by Yorkists to impersonate firstly one of the sons of Edward IV (see PRINCES IN THE TOWER) and subsequently the Earl of Warwick (also imprisoned in the Tower of London), in an attempt to overthrow Henry VII. He was crowned in Dublin in 1487 as Edward VI but captured when the Yorkist uprising was defeated. He was not executed, but given a menial post in the royal household.

simnel cake /'sɪmn(ə)l/ n. Brit. a rich fruit cake, usu. with a marzipan layer and decoration, eaten esp. at Easter or during Lent. [ME f. OF simenel, ult. f. L simila or Gk semidalis fine flour]

Simon^{1} /'saɪmən/, (Marvin) Neil (b.1927), American dramatist. Most of his plays are wry comedies portraying aspects of middle-class life; they include Barefoot in the Park (1963), The Odd Couple (1965), and Brighton Beach Memoirs (1983). Among his musicals are Sweet Charity (1966) and They're Playing Our Song (1979).

Simon^{2} /'saɪmən/, Paul (b.1942), American singer and songwriter. He formed a folk-rock partnership with his school friend Art Garfunkel (b.1941), which first made its mark with the album Sounds of Silence (1966). Further achievements were the soundtrack music to the film The Graduate (1968) and the song 'Bridge Over Troubled Water' (1970) from the album of the same name. The duo split up in 1970 and Simon went on to pursue a successful solo career, recording albums such as Graceland (1986), which featured many black South African musicians. He has also acted in films, including Woody Allen's Annie Hall (1977).

Singapore /ˌsɪŋə'pɔː(r)/ a country in SE Asia consisting of the island of Singapore and about 54 smaller islands; pop. (est. 1991) 3,045,000; official languages, Malay, Chinese, Tamil, and English; capital, Singapore City. Singapore lies off the southern tip of the Malay Peninsula, to which it is linked by a causeway carrying a road and railway. Sir Stamford Raffles established a trading post under the East India Company in 1819, and it was incorporated with Penang and Malacca to form the Straits Settlements in 1826; these came under British colonial rule in 1867. Singapore rapidly grew, by virtue of its large protected harbour, to become the most important commercial centre and naval base in SE Asia. It fell to the Japanese in 1942, and after liberation became first a British Crown Colony in 1946 and then a self-governing state within the Commonwealth in 1959. Federated with Malaysia in 1963, it declared full independence two years later and remains a world trade and financial centre. □ Singaporean /-'pɔːrɪən/ adj. & n.

Singer^{1} /'sɪŋə(r)/, Isaac Bashevis (1904–91), Polish-born American novelist and short-story writer. His work, written in Yiddish but chiefly known from English translations, blends realistic detail and elements of fantasy, mysticism, and magic to portray the lives of Polish Jews from many periods. Notable titles include the novels The Magician of Lublin (1955) and The Slave (1962) and the short-story collection The Spinoza of Market Street (1961). He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1978.

Singer^{2} /'sɪŋə(r)/, Isaac Merrit (1811–75), American inventor. In 1851 he designed and built the first commercially successful sewing machine, which included features already developed by Elias Howe. Although he was successfully sued by Howe for infringement of patent, Singer founded his own company, gained patents for improvements to the machine, and became the world's largest sewing machine manufacturer; his success was partly based on his pioneering use of hire-purchase agreements. Sinn Fein /ʃɪn 'feɪn/ an Irish movement founded in 1905 by Arthur Griffith, originally aiming at the independence of Ireland and a revival of Irish culture and language and now dedicated to the political unification of Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Sinn Fein became increasingly committed to Republicanism after the failure of the Home Rule movement and supported the Easter Rising of 1916. Having won a majority of Irish seats in the 1918 general election, its members refused to go to Westminster and set up their own parliament in Ireland in 1919. The Republican section of the party supported Eamon de Valera in his rejection of the Anglo-Irish Treaty, and most of the section's members joined his Fianna Fáil party on its formation in 1926. The remainder of the party began to function as the political wing of the IRA, and in 1969 split like the IRA into Official and Provisional wings. □ Sinn Feiner n. [Ir. sinn féin we ourselves]

Sino-Japanese Wars /'saɪnəʊˌdʒæpəˌniːz/ two wars fought between China and Japan. The first, in 1894–5, caused by rivalry over Korea, was ended by the Treaty of Shimonoseki in Japan's favour. Poor Chinese performance in the war was a factor in the eventual overthrow of the Manchus in 1912. In the second war (1937–45) Japanese expansionism led to trouble in Manchuria in 1931 and to the establishment of a Japanese puppet state (Manchukuo) a year later. Hostilities began in earnest in 1937, but after two years of dramatic Japanese successes degenerated into stalemate. The Japanese position was gradually eroded by Communist guerrillas and finally collapsed at the end of the Second World War.

▪ Like other nomadic Plains Indians, the Sioux were buffalo hunters. Theirs was a warrior society, in which men gained esteem from performing brave deeds. When incursions from white settlers and prospectors greatly increased after the discovery of gold in their lands, some Sioux resisted violently; a treaty was made with the US government, but was broken by incomers when gold was again discovered, in the Black Hills of Dakota. Under such chiefs as Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse, Sioux resistance led to the massacre of General Custer and his men at Little Bighorn (1876) but was ended by the Battle of Wounded Knee in 1890.

(See note below.) □ situationist n. & adj. [SITUATION + -ISM]

- Situationism regards modern industrial society as being inevitably oppressive and exploitative, a system in which the individual is no more than a commodity. The movement rejects all conventional politics and demands a comprehensive revolution in relationships, work, and all aspects of everyday life. Influenced by surrealism and Dada, situationism came to public attention through the French magazine Internationale Situationniste from 1958, and was an inspiration behind the strikes and student uprisings of May 1968.

Sitwell /ˈsɪtwel/, Dame Edith (Louisa) (1887–1964), English poet and critic. Light-hearted and experimental, her early verse, like that of her brothers Osbert (1892–1969) and Sacheverell (1897–1988), marked a revolt against the prevailing Georgian style of the day. In 1923 she attracted attention with Façade, a group of poems in notated rhythm recited to music by William Walton. Her later verse is graver and makes increasing use of Christian symbolism.

- Many invertebrates lack an internal skeleton, though a tough external one is seen in the mollusc's shell and the arthropod's exoskeleton. The more primitive fish have a cartilaginous skeleton, and the higher vertebrates one of bone. The human skeleton is conventionally regarded as consisting of two main parts: the skull, spine, and ribs, which support and protect body tissues and organs; and the limb bones and their attachments, which function in conjunction with muscles as levers to provide movement. (See also BONE.)

- Skin protects the body from external injury, excessive heat or cold, fluid loss, and infection. It also acts as a sense-organ, being provided with receptors for temperature, touch, pressure, and pain, and it plays an important part in controlling the temperature of the body and in maintaining the balance of body fluid. The skin's outer layer or epidermis consists of cells that are continually renewed and pushed outwards, being progressively impregnated with keratin and finally dying and sloughing off. The inner layer or dermis is a thick layer of tissue containing blood capillaries and lymph vessels, sensory nerve-endings, sweat glands and their ducts, sebaceous glands, hair follicles, and smooth muscle fibres.

Skinner /ˈskɪnə(r)/, Burrhus Frederic (1904–90), American psychologist. He promoted the view that the proper aim of psychology should be to predict, and hence be able to control, behaviour. He demonstrated that arbitrary responses in animals could be obtained by using reinforcements — rewards and punishments. He applied similar techniques in both clinical and educational practice, devising one of the first teaching machines, and was involved in the development of programmed learning. Skinner also attempted to account for the nature and development of language as a response to conditioning.

slavery /ˈsleɪvərɪ/ n. 1 the condition of a slave. 2 exhausting labour; drudgery. 3 the custom of having slaves. (See note below.)

- Slavery was a widespread institution in the classical world, on which the economy was dependent. The island of Delos served as the main slave market in the Aegean; in both the Greek and Roman periods the main source of slaves was the enslavement of prisoners of war. Major slave revolts occurred during the 2nd and 1st centuries BC, but the practice did not begin to diminish until the spread of Christianity and the decline of the Roman Empire in the 3rd to 5th centuries AD.
- The transportation of slaves from Africa to the Americas by European traders began on a large scale in the 16th and 17th centuries, and although slavery became illegal in Britain in 1772, it remained an important feature of the economy of the British Empire until the 19th century; the slave-trade was abolished in 1807 and slavery itself throughout the empire in 1833. In the American South slavery was an integral part of the cotton-based economy, and the abolition campaign waged during the first half of the 19th century eventually led to the American Civil War and to final emancipation. In some parts of the world chattel slavery, the ownership of one person by another, continues to exist.

- The Slavonic branch constitutes a major division of the Indo-European family. It is made up of three groups: South Slavonic, which includes Serbo-Croat, Slovene, Macedonian, and Bulgarian; West Slavonic, which includes Czech, Slovak, and Polish; and East Slavonic, which includes Russian, Ukrainian, and Belarusian. Important common characteristics of Slavonic languages are that nouns and adjectives are highly inflected (Russian and Polish have as many as seven cases), and that verbs have few tenses but preserve aspect, a distinction between actions thought of as finished or limited in time and those regarded as continuous. The two principal alphabets used are Cyrillic and Roman. The earliest written Slavonic language is Church Slavonic, the language of the Orthodox Church, dating from the 9th century AD. (See also CHURCH SLAVONIC.)

- The capacity for sleep is general among animals, and even invertebrates usually have a period of torpor at some stage in their daily cycle of activity. The pattern of sleep in mammals tends to be related to their feeding habits and dominant senses, but some (e.g. lions, horses, and sheep) show no clear-cut rhythm and may sleep at any time. The physiology of sleep has been studied by analysing the electrical activity of the human brain: the relatively fast electrical rhythm of the waking brain is replaced during sleep by slow waves, with only occasional bursts of faster activity. This activity changes during dreaming, which is associated with rapid movements of the eyes. There is no general agreement about the function of sleep.

Smith^{1} /smɪθ/, Adam (1723–90), Scottish economist and philosopher. He is regarded by many as the founder of modern economics, and his work marks a significant turning-point in the breakdown of mercantilism and the spread of laissez-faire ideas. Smith retired from academic life to write his Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations (1776), establishing theories of labour, distribution, wages, prices, and money, and advocating free trade and minimal state interference in economic matters. His work was highly influential in terms not only of economic but also of political theory in the following century.

Smith^{2} /smɪθ/, Bessie (1894–1937), American blues singer. She became a leading artist in the 1920s and made over 150 recordings, including some with Benny Goodman and Louis Armstrong. She was involved in a car accident and died after being refused admission to a 'whites only' hospital.

Smith^{3} /smɪθ/, Ian (Douglas) (b.1919), Rhodesian statesman, Prime Minister 1964–79. He founded the white supremacist Rhodesian Front (renamed the Republican Front in 1981) in 1962, becoming Prime Minister and head of the white minority government two years later. In 1965 he issued a unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) after Britain stipulated that it would only grant the country independence if Smith undertook to prepare for black majority rule. He eventually conceded in 1979 and resigned to make way for majority rule; after the country became the independent state of Zimbabwe he remained active in politics, leading the Republican Front until 1987.

Smith^4 /smɪθ/, Joseph (1805–44), American religious leader and founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (the Mormons). In 1827, according to his own account, he was led by divine revelation to find the sacred texts written by the prophet Mormon, which he later translated and published as the Book of Mormon in 1830. He founded the Mormon Church in the same year and established a large community in Illinois, of which he became mayor. He was murdered by a mob while in prison awaiting trial for conspiracy.

Smith^5 /smɪθ/, Stevie (pseudonym of Florence Margaret Smith) (1902–71), English poet and novelist. Although she first attracted notice with her novel Novel on Yellow Paper (1936), she is now mainly remembered for her witty, caustic, and enigmatic verse, often illustrated by her own comic drawings. Collections include A Good Time was Had By All (1937), Not Waving But Drowning (1957), and the posthumous Collected Poems (1975).

Smith^6 /smɪθ/, Sydney (1771–1845), English Anglican churchman, essayist, and wit. He is notable for his witty contributions to the periodical the Edinburgh Review and as the author of the Letters of Peter Plymley (1807), which defended Catholic Emancipation.

Smith^7 /smɪθ/, William (1769–1839), English land-surveyor and geologist. Despite being self-taught, he became known as the father of English geology. Working initially in the area around Bath, he discovered that rock strata could be distinguished on the basis of their characteristic assemblages of fossils, and that strata in different places could be identified by these. Smith later travelled extensively in Britain, accumulating data which enabled him to produce the first geological map of England and Wales. Many of the names he devised for particular strata are still in use.

- There are nearly 2,400 species of snake, belonging to eleven or more families. They evolved from burrowing lizards during the Cretaceous period, and the pythons and other primitive snakes still bear the vestiges of hindlimbs. Unlike lizards, they lack eyelids and shed the skin (including the 'spectacles' over the eyes) in one piece. All snakes are carnivorous and their jaws are capable of considerable extension to assist the swallowing of large prey. Many overpower their prey by constriction, which results in death by asphyxiation. Venomous bites have developed independently in three families, being associated with small fangs at the back of the mouth (some members of Colubridae), larger fixed fangs at the front of the mouth (Elapidae, e.g. cobras and mambas), or large folding fangs (Viperidae, e.g. vipers and rattlesnakes).

- The social insects comprise some Hymenoptera (bees, wasps, and ants), together with the Isoptera (termites). Many of these live in large colonies that have a complex caste structure, with an egg-laying queen, males or drones, infertile workers, and (in some cases) soldiers. Such colonies operate effectively as single organisms, controlled by the pheromones emitted by the queen. Honey bee and ant colonies are usually able to survive the winter, but in the case of most wasps and bumble-bees only the fertilized queen overwinters. (See also BEE.)

Social and Liberal Democrats (abbr. SLD) (in the UK) a political party formed in 1988 from a majority of the membership of the Liberal Party and the Social Democratic Party. It was officially renamed in 1989 as the Liberal Democrats.

social contract n. (also social compact) an implicit agreement among the members of a society to cooperate for social benefits, e.g. by sacrificing some individual freedom for state protection. Theories of a social contract became popular in the 16th and 17th centuries as a means of explaining the origin of government and the obligations of subjects. Postulating a savage, unregulated original state of nature, theorists such as Thomas Hobbes, John Locke, and, later, Jean-Jacques Rousseau held that it would have been in each person's interest to agree to the establishment of government, the terms and form of which would be regulated by the agreement or contract made. Hobbes felt that an absolute government was implied by this contract, but Locke and Rousseau argued for democratic and even revolutionary ideas: if government policy ran counter to the general will, the contract was broken and the subjects had the right to rebel. More recently the idea of the social contract has been revived by the philosopher John Rawls and in reference to unofficial agreements between governments and trade unions.

social Darwinism n. the theory that individuals, groups, and peoples are subject to the same Darwinian laws of natural selection as are plants and animals. Advocated by Herbert Spencer and others in the late 19th and early 20th centuries but now largely discredited, the theory held that superior individuals or groups survived and succeeded while the weaker disappeared, with a consequent benefit to society, and that the existing order must be the natural one. It was used to justify political conservatism, imperialism, and racism and to discourage intervention and reform.

Social Democratic and Labour Party (abbr. SDLP) a left-of-centre political party in Northern Ireland, formed in 1970 and supported largely by Catholics. It calls for the establishment of a united Ireland by constitutional means, and rejects the violent tactics of the IRA.

Social Democratic Party (abbr. SDP) a UK political party with moderate socialist aims, founded in 1981 by a group of former Labour MPs and disbanded in 1990 after political regroupings. (See also LIBERAL PARTY, GANG OF FOUR 2.)

socialism /'səʊʃəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. a political and economic theory of social organization which advocates that the means of production, distribution, and exchange should be regulated or owned by the community as a whole; policy or practice based on this theory. Socialism has been used to describe positions as far apart as anarchism, Soviet state Communism, and social democracy; however, it necessarily implies an opposition to the untrammelled workings of the economic market. Although socialist ideas can be traced back to classical times, the word was first used in the early 19th century in reference to pioneering reformers including Saint-Simon in France and Robert Owen in Britain. Marx and Engels attempted to bring precise and scientific organization to theories of socialism, but used the word communist to describe their ideal classless state, reserving socialism for the transitional state posited as coming between the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of communism. Since the time of Marx a major source of division among socialists has been the question of whether the transition from capitalism to socialism should be achieved by revolutionary or parliamentary means. Although the Russian Revolution in 1917 put the theories of the revolutionary school into practice, the socialist parties that arose in most European countries from the late 19th century generally tended towards social democracy. Socialism in the West is currently somewhat overshadowed by free-market ideas, but may draw renewed strength from disillusion at the perceived social and environmental costs of capitalism; at a deeper level it has brought concepts such as the welfare state and state intervention in the economy into the political mainstream. (See also COMMUNISM, MARXISM.) □ socialist n. & adj. socialistic /ˌsəʊʃə'lɪstɪk/ adj. socialistically adv. [F socialisme (as SOCIAL)] socialist realism n. the theory of art, literature, and music officially sanctioned by the state in some Communist countries (especially in the Soviet Union under Stalin), by which artistic work was supposed to reflect and promote the ideals of a socialist society. Cf. SOCIAL REALISM.

sociobiology /ˌsəʊsɪəʊbaɪ'olədʒɪ, ˌsəʊʃɪ-/ n. the scientific study of the biological aspects of social behaviour in animals and in humans. Sociobiology gives special emphasis to social systems considered as ecological adaptations, and controversially attempts a mechanistic explanation of social behaviour in terms of modern biological and evolutionary theory. The theory suggests in particular that the apparent altruism of certain social animals and insects is due to their acting in a way which will best ensure the survival of their genes. This is partly based on the work of W. D. Hamilton (b.1936) on the breeding system of social insects such as ants, in which a worker has more genes in common with its sisters than it would have with its own offspring, and can therefore perpetuate its genes by remaining sterile and raising the queen's offspring. Sociobiology has also been developed and popularized by E. O. Wilson and Richard Dawkins. □ sociobiologist n. sociobiological /-ˌbaɪə'lodʒɪk(ə)l/ adj. sociobiologically adv.

sociology /ˌsəʊsɪ'olədʒɪ, ˌsəʊʃɪ-/ n. the study of the development, structure, and functioning of human society. Although the word was coined by Auguste Comte *c.*1838, sociology was founded as a formal discipline by Durkheim, Weber, and Marx in the late 19th century. Sociology asserts that humans act under the influence of history, culture, and the expectations of others. Sociologists are less concerned with individuals than with patterns of behaviour which recur irrespective of the individuals concerned; some sociologists examine the factors, such as class, status, and expected role, which lead to cohesion or conflict in the family or community; others study social problems such as crime, drugs, and domestic violence. Sociological findings are now used extensively by governments and in advertising, public relations, and other businesses. □ sociologist n. sociological /-sɪə'lɒdʒɪk(ə)l, -ʃɪə-/ adj. sociologically adv. [F sociologie (as SOCIO-, -LOGY)]

Socrates /'sokrəˌti:z/ (469–399 BC), Greek philosopher. His interests lay not in the speculation about the natural world engaged in by earlier philosophers but in pursuing questions of ethics. He was the centre of a circle of friends and disciples in Athens and his method of inquiry (the Socratic method) was based on discourse with those around him; his careful questioning was designed to reveal truth and to expose error. Although he wrote nothing himself, he was immensely influential; he is known chiefly through his disciple Plato, who recorded Socrates' dialogues and teachings in, for example, the Symposium and the Phaedo. Charged with introducing strange gods and corrupting the young, Socrates was sentenced to death and condemned to take hemlock, which he did, spurning offers to help him escape into exile.

Soddy /'sodɪ/, Frederick (1877–1956), English physicist. He worked with Ernest Rutherford in Canada on radioactive decay and formulated a theory of isotopes, the word isotope being coined by him in 1913. He also assisted William Ramsay in London in the discovery of helium. Soddy wrote on economics, and later concentrated on creating an awareness of the social relevance of science. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1921.

sodium /'səʊdɪəm/ n. a soft silver-white reactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 11; symbol Na). (See note below.) □ sodium bicarbonate a white soluble powder (chem. formula: $NaHCO_3$) used in fire extinguishers and effervescent drinks, and as a raising agent in baking (also called baking soda). sodium carbonate a white powder (chem. formula: Na_2CO_3) with many commercial applications including the manufacture of soap and glass (also called washing soda). sodium chloride a colourless crystalline compound occurring naturally in sea water and halite; common salt (chem. formula: $NaCl$). sodium hydroxide a deliquescent, strongly alkaline compound (chem. formula: $NaOH$) (also called caustic soda). sodium nitrate a white powdery compound (chem. formula: $NaNO_3$) used mainly in the manufacture of fertilizers. sodium-vapour lamp (or sodium lamp) a lamp using an electrical discharge in sodium vapour and giving a yellow light. [SODA + -IUM]

- Sodium was first isolated by Humphry Davy in 1807, and is a member of the alkali-metal group. It is a common element in the earth's crust, notably as rock salt (sodium chloride). Sodium compounds have many industrial and other uses; the liquid metal is used as a coolant in some types of nuclear reactor. The symbol Na is from the Latin name natrium.

solar power n. power obtained by harnessing solar energy. Energy from the sun has long been used directly in some processes, such as evaporating sea water to make salt in hot countries. Modern attempts to harness solar radiation use arrays of solar cells or panels to convert it into electricity, a method favoured for powering satellites and space probes. Greater output may be obtained by using steerable mirrors and a parabolic reflector, either to heat a solar furnace or to produce steam to drive a generator, but such methods are too costly for general use. Solar panels may also be used to heat water directly, especially for domestic use, and solar ovens have been used in the tropics.

solar system n. Astron. the collection of nine planets and their moons in orbit round the sun, together with smaller bodies in the form of asteroids, meteoroids, and comets. Most of these objects lie within or close to the plane of the ecliptic, suggesting that the solar system originated in the condensation of a disc of a primordial gaseous nebula, forming a large massive star at the centre of a group of orbiting inert bodies. It remains unexplained why the planets, with mass much less than that of the sun, should contain most of the angular momentum of the system. The postulated Oort cloud extends the limits of the solar system to a distance of one light year from the sun. (See also PLANET.)

Solidarity /ˌsolɪˈdærɪtɪ/ an independent trade-union movement in Poland which developed into a mass campaign for political change and inspired popular opposition to Communist regimes in other eastern European countries. It was formed under the leadership of Lech Wałęsa in 1980 following a series of strikes in the shipyards of Gdańsk, but banned in 1981 after the imposition of martial law in Poland. Legalized again in 1989 following further strikes, Solidarity won a majority in the elections of that year. [transl. Polish Solidarność] solidity /səˈlɪdɪtɪ/ n. the state of being solid; firmness.

solid state n. Physics the state of matter which retains its boundaries without support. (See note below.) □ solid-state adj. using the electronic properties of solids, especially semiconductors, to replace those of valves.

- The solid state is one of the fundamental states in which matter can exist, along with the liquid, gas, and plasma states. The atoms or molecules in a solid occupy fixed positions with respect to each other and cannot move freely; solids oppose deforming forces and solid bodies do not easily penetrate each other. Solids may be broadly classified into crystalline and amorphous. In crystalline solids, such as saltar quartz, the atoms are arranged in an orderly and repeating manner. In amorphous solids, such as amorphous sulphur, this order is absent over large distances (on an interatomic scale); glasses are liquids which have solidified without any crystallization having occurred.

solidus /ˈsolɪdəs/ n. (pl. solidi /-ˌdaɪ/) 1 an oblique stroke (/) used in writing fractions ($^3/_4$), to separate other figures and letters, or to denote alternatives (and/or) and ratios (miles/day). 2 (in full solidus curve) a curve in a graph of the temperature and composition of a mixture, below which the substance is entirely solid. 3 hist. a gold coin of the later Roman Empire. - The most extreme form of scepticism, solipsism is typically based on claims that all we can perceive are our immediate experiences or states of mind, and that these do not supply an adequate basis for knowledge of anything further. A solipsist therefore denies both that there is an external physical world and that there are any other minds.

Solomon /ˈsoləmən/, son of David, king of ancient Israel *c.*970–*c.*930 BC. During his reign he extended the kingdom of Israel to the border with Egypt and the Euphrates, and became famous both for his wisdom and for the magnificence of his palaces. In 957 he built the Temple of Jerusalem, with which his name is associated; this, together with his other building schemes and the fortifying of strategic cities, led to a system of levies and enforced labour, and the resulting discontent culminated in the secession of the northern tribes (see ISRAEL^1 2). In the Bible, Solomon is traditionally associated with the Song of Solomon, Ecclesiastes, and Proverbs; the Wisdom of Solomon in the Apocrypha is also ascribed to him. (See also JUDGEMENT OF SOLOMON.) □ Solomonic /ˌsoləˈmonɪk/ adj.

Solomon Islands (also Solomons) a country consisting of a group of islands in the SW Pacific, to the east of New Guinea; pop. (est. 1991) 326,000; languages, English (official), Pidgin, local Malayo-Polynesian languages; capital, Honiara. Visited by the Spanish in 1658, the islands were divided between Britain and Germany in the late 19th century; the southern islands became a British protectorate in 1893 while the north remained German until mandated to Australia in 1920. The islands were the scene of heavy fighting between Allied and Japanese forces in 1942–3. With the exception of the northern part of the chain (now part of Papua New Guinea), the Solomons became self-governing in 1976 and fully independent within the Commonwealth two years later. □ Solomon Islander n.

Solon /ˈsəʊlon/ (*c.*630–*c.*560 BC), Athenian statesman and lawgiver. One of the Seven Sages listed by Plato, he is notable for his economic, constitutional, and legal reforms, begun in about 594. He revised the existing code of laws established by Draco, making them less severe; for example, he abolished the punishment of slavery for debt and freed those already enslaved for this, and reserved the death penalty for murder. His division of the citizens into four classes based on wealth rather than birth with a corresponding division of political responsibility laid the foundations of Athenian democracy.

Solothurn /ˈzəʊləʊˌtʊən/ (called in French Soleure) 1 a canton in NW Switzerland, in the Jura mountains. 2 its capital, a town on the River Aare; pop. (1990) 15,430. Occupying a strategic position at the south-western approach to the Rhine, it became a free imperial city in 1218, acquiring in the 15th century the territories comprising the modern canton. It joined the Swiss Confederation in 1481.

Solzhenitsyn /ˌsolʒə'nɪtsɪn/, Alexander (Russian name Aleksandr Isaevich Solzhenitsyn) (b.1918), Russian novelist. In 1945 he was imprisoned for eight years in a labour camp for criticizing Stalin and spent another three years in internal exile before being rehabilitated. After his release he was allowed to publish his first novel One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (1962), describing conditions in a labour camp. In 1963, however, he was again in conflict with the authorities and thereafter was unable to have his books published in the Soviet Union. He was deported to West Germany in 1974 following the publication abroad of the first part of his trilogy The Gulag Archipelago in 1973; the first Russian-language edition appeared in 1989. Solzhenitsyn lived in the US until returning to Russia in 1994. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1970.

Somalia /sə'mo:lɪə/ a country in the Horn of Africa; pop. (est. 1991) 8,041,000; official languages, Somali and Arabic; capital, Mogadishu. The area of the Horn of Africa was divided between British and Italian spheres of influence in the late 19th century, and the modern republic (which became independent in 1960) is a result of the unification of the former British Somaliland and Italian Somalia. Since independence, Somalia has been involved in border disputes with Kenya and Ethiopia, the latter leading to an intermittent war over the Ogaden. Civil war broke out in Somalia in 1988 and led to the overthrow of the government in 1991; in the same year northern Somalia declared itself independent as the Somaliland Republic. Factional fighting has continued, with the US intervening militarily (1992–4) in an attempt to restore order and ensure the safe passage of famine relief supplies.

Somoza /sə'məʊzə/, Anastasio (full surname Somoza García) (1896–1956), Nicaraguan soldier and statesman, President 1937–47 and 1951–6. After becoming Commander-in-Chief of the Nicaraguan army in 1933, he organized a military coup in 1936 and took presidential office the following year. From this time he ruled Nicaragua as a virtual dictator, exiling the majority of his political opponents and building up a fortune from land and business ventures. He was assassinated in 1956, after which his eldest son Luis Somoza Debayle (1922–67) succeeded him as President, serving from 1957 to 1963. Luis's younger brother Anastasio Somoza Debayle (1925–80) became President in 1967, after winning the general election that year. His dictatorial regime was overthrown by the Sandinistas in 1979, and he was assassinated while in exile in Paraguay.

sonar /'səʊnə(r)/ n. a system for the underwater detection of objects by reflected or emitted sound; an apparatus for this. Hydrophones were used in the 1890s to detect the sound of engines and propellers, but by 1918 a system of transmitting a pulse of sound and using its rebounding echo to detect a stationary submerged craft had been developed. At first known as asdic, it was widely used in the Second World War. Sonar has important civil applications, its simplest form being the echo-sounder used for determining water depth. It is also used for locating fish shoals, and recently developed forms of sonar use sideways scanning to give very detailed images of the seabed and objects lying on it. [sound *na*vigation and *r*anging, after radar] sonata /sə'nɑːtə/ n. a musical composition for one or two instruments (one usually being a keyboard instrument), generally in several movements with one (especially the first) or more in what has come to be known as sonata form (see SONATA FORM). - Originating in Italy, the sonnet was established by Petrarch as a major form of love poetry; introduced to England by Thomas Wyatt and developed by Henry, Earl of Surrey (*c.*1517–47), it was widely used from the late 16th century. Sir Philip Sidney, Shakespeare, and others wrote sequences of love sonnets, while John Donne and Milton extended the form to encompass religious and political subjects. Also in the late 16th century, Spenser developed a new form of stanza for the sonnet (see SPENSER). The sonnet form was revived in the 19th century, and adopted by such writers as Keats, Wordsworth, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and Dante Gabriel Rossetti. The rhyme-schemes of the sonnet follow two basic patterns, the Italian or Petrarchan (see PETRARCHAN) and the English or Shakespearian. Shakespeare's sonnets comprise three quatrains and a couplet, rhymed ababcdcdefefgg.

Gk sophistēs f. sophizomai: see SOPHISM]

- The sophists were in business offering the equivalent of university education: for a hefty fee they would teach, in particular, rhetoric — how to argue a case in a lawcourt or an assembly. But they were also thinkers with argued views. Perhaps most important was the contrast they emphasized between what exists by nature and what exists only by human convention. This led not only to moral relativism (what is right depends entirely on what society thinks right) but to amoralism (morality is a matter merely of conventions, which the intelligent and strong person will disregard). Such views, together with the idea that they taught how to make the worse case appear the better, brought the sophists into disrepute; they were condemned by Plato, and the popular distrust of sophists is today reflected in the derogatory use of the terms sophist and sophistry.

soul music n. (also soul) a kind of black American popular music which developed in the early 1950s, combining rhythm and blues with the emotional fervour of gospel music. Soul music is characterized by an emphasis on vocals and on an impassioned improvisatory delivery. It was popularized by record labels such as, in particular, Motown, for which artists such as Marvin Gaye and the Supremes recorded during the 1960s and 1970s; the period is usually regarded as soul's classic era. Many soul performers, for example Aretha Franklin and more recently Whitney Houston (b.1963), began their careers by singing gospel music in church. Other significant performers include James Brown and Otis Redding (1941–67). (See also MOTOWN 2.)

AF soun, OF son (n.), AF suner, OF soner (v.) f. L sonus]

- Sound consists of longitudinal waves of pressure passing through solids, liquids, or gases; it cannot travel through a vacuum. The speed of sound is independent of frequency and is constant for a particular medium, although density and temperature are also important: the speed of sound in air is about 344 metres (1,128 ft) per second. In general, sound travels faster through solids than through liquids, and faster through liquids than through gases. The human ear responds to frequencies between about 20 Hz and 20,000 Hz. Frequency is perceived as pitch: if one sound has twice the frequency of another, it is perceived (in musical terms) as being an octave above it. Most musical tones, however, are complex in form, including many higher frequencies or harmonics as well as the fundamental frequency. Frequencies below and above the range of human hearing are called infrasonic and ultrasonic respectively. (See also ULTRASONICS.)

sound recording n. 1 the transcription of sound waves on to a storage medium. (See note below.) 2 a permanent record of music or other sounds.

- The first device able both to record and reproduce sound was Thomas Edison's phonograph (1877), in which the vibrations of a stylus were recorded as indentations on a cylinder. From this was developed the gramophone (1897). Flat gramophone records were originally recorded on a wax master, using an acoustic horn and a stylus to cut a fine spiral groove, and records were played back by a reversal of this process. Recording on disc became electrically controlled in the late 1920s, and from the early 1950s record-players were operated electrically, with the signal from the pick-up amplified electronically and passed to a loudspeaker. The introduction of the long-playing record and stereophonic sound in the 1950s allowed great improvements in the quality of sound reproduction. Magnetic tape, in which sound is recorded as patterns of magnetization in a suitable medium, began to be used to record sound in the 1940s, and with the advent of the audio cassette in the 1960s tapes began to rival records in popularity. Further developments were multi-track and digital recording. The compact disc, which stores audio signals (or other forms of information) optically as digital data, was introduced by the Philips and Sony companies in 1982. Playing a compact disc involves scanning it with a laser beam and converting the information into electrical signals photoelectrically.

South Africa a country occupying the southernmost part of the continent of Africa; pop. (est. 1991) 36,762,000; official languages, English, Afrikaans, Zulu, Xhosa, and seven other languages; administrative capital, Pretoria; seat of legislature, Cape Town. Settled by the Dutch in the 17th century, the Cape later came under British administration (1806), which set in motion a series of conflicting political and economic developments leading to inland expansion, the subjugation of the native population, and finally war between the British and the Boer (Dutch) settlers at the end of the 19th century (see BOER WAR). The defeated Boer republics of Transvaal and Orange Free State were annexed as British Crown Colonies in 1902, but joined with the colonies of Natal and the Cape to form the self-governing Union of South Africa in 1910. After supporting Britain in both world wars, in 1961 South Africa became a republic and left the Commonwealth. From 1948 it pursued a policy of white minority rule (apartheid), which resulted in conflict with its neighbours and led to international diplomatic isolation. Ten regions were designated as African homelands, four of these (Transkei, Ciskei, Bophuthatswana, and Venda) being designated sovereign states but recognized only by South Africa. A process of constitutional change involving the gradual dismantling of the instruments of apartheid began in 1990 following the release of the African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela. Majority rule was achieved after the country's first democratic elections in April 1994. Conducted peacefully despite fears of violence from white right-wingers and between supporters of the ANC and the Zulu Inkatha party, the elections were won by the ANC, and Nelson Mandela was installed as President at the head of a multiracial, multi-party government. South Africa rejoined the Commonwealth in 1994. (See also AZANIA.) □ South African adj. & n.

Soviet Union (called in full Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, abbr. USSR) a former federation of Communist republics occupying the northern half of Asia and part of eastern Europe; capital, Moscow. Created from the Russian empire as a Communist state in the aftermath of the 1917 Russian Revolution and the Russian Civil War, the Soviet Union was the largest country in the world. It comprised fifteen republics: Russia, Belarus, Ukraine, Georgia, Armenia, Moldova, Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, and the three Baltic states (annexed in 1940). After the Second World War, in which it was invaded by Germany and sustained possibly over 20 million casualties in bitter fighting mainly on its own soil, the Soviet Union emerged as a superpower in rivalry with the US, leading to the cold war and the polarization of much of the world into Communist and non-Communist blocs. Decades of repression and economic failure eventually led to attempts at liberalization and economic reform under President Mikhail Gorbachev during the 1980s. This resulted, however, in a resurgence of nationalist feeling in the republics, some of which began to secede from the Union. The USSR was formally dissolved in 1991, some of its constituents joining a looser confederation, the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Spain /speɪn/ (Spanish España /es'paɲa/) a country in SW Europe, occupying the greater part of the Iberian peninsula; pop. (est. 1991) 39,045,000; languages, Spanish (official), Catalan; capital, Madrid. The Iberian peninsula came under Roman occupation after 206 BC, following a period of Carthaginian domination. The Romans were displaced by the Visigoths in the 5th century, and the Moors (Muslim invaders from Morocco) in turn established control 711–18. In the medieval period Moorish rule fragmented and independent Christian kingdoms were established in the north, of which the most important were Aragon and Castile. In the late 15th century the marriage of Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile, and their reconquest of the last Moorish stronghold, Granada, reunited Spain. Under the Habsburg kings of the 16th century Spain became the dominant European power, building up a huge empire in America and elsewhere. Thereafter it declined, suffering as a result of the War of the Spanish Succession and the Napoleonic Wars and losing most of its overseas empire in the early 19th century. A republic was formed in 1931, which was ended by the Spanish Civil War (1936–9) and the establishment of a Fascist dictatorship under General Franco. Franco's death in 1975 was followed by the re-establishment of a constitutional monarchy and considerable democratization. Spain became a member of the EEC on 1 Jan. 1986.

- Spanish is the most widely spoken of the Romance languages, with about 265 million people using it as a first language. It is the official language of Spain and of most countries of Central and South America (notable exceptions being Brazil and Guyana); the large number of Hispanic immigrants, especially from Mexico, means that it is now also widely spoken in the southern states of the US. It contains many Arabic words dating from the time when the Moors dominated Spain (8th–15th centuries). Dialects of Spanish spoken in Mexico and Central and South America are derived from Castilian Spanish, the standard spoken and literary form in Spain since the 15th century; the main differences between Castilian and Latin American Spanish are phonological, in particular, the replacement of /θ/ for c or z in Castilian with /s/ in Latin American.

Spanish America the parts of America colonized in the 16th century by the Spanish, including Central and South America and parts of the West Indies.

Spanish-American War /ˈspænɪʃəˌmerɪkən/ a war between Spain and the United States in the Caribbean and the Philippines in 1898. American public opinion having been aroused by Spanish atrocities in Cuba and the destruction of the warship Maine in Santiago harbour, the US declared war and destroyed the Spanish fleets in both the Pacific and the West Indies before successfully invading Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, all of which Spain gave up by the Treaty of Paris, signed at the end of the year.

Spanish Armada see ARMADA.

Spanish Civil War (1936–9) the conflict between Nationalist forces (including monarchists and members of the Falange Party) and Republicans (including socialists and Communists and Catalan and Basque separatists) in Spain. It began with a military uprising against the leftist, Republican Popular Front government in July 1936; the Nationalists were supported by Fascist Germany and Italy, and the Republicans by the Soviet Union, as well as by an International Brigade of volunteers from Europe and America. In bitter fighting the Nationalists, led by General Franco, gradually gained control of the countryside but failed to capture the capital, Madrid. Bombing of civilians was carried out by German aircraft, including the destruction of the Basque town of Guernica in 1937. Various attempts to bring the war to an end failed until, after periods of prolonged stalemate, Franco finally succeeded in capturing Barcelona and Madrid in early 1939. He established a Fascist dictatorship that lasted until his death in 1975.

Spanish Succession, War of the (1701–14) a European war, provoked by the death of the Spanish king Charles II without issue, which marked the end of Louis XIV's attempts to establish French dominance over Europe. The Grand Alliance of Britain, the Netherlands, and the Holy Roman emperor, largely through the victories of the Duke of Marlborough, threw back a French invasion of the Low Countries, and, although the Peace of Utrecht (1713–14) confirmed the accession of a Bourbon king in Spain, prevented Spain and France from being united under one crown.

Spanish Town a town in Jamaica, west of Kingston, the second largest town and a former capital of Jamaica; pop. (1982) 89,100.

spectacles /ˈspektək(ə)lz/ n.pl. (also pair of spectacles sing.) a pair of lenses in a frame resting on the nose and ears, used to correct defective eyesight or protect the eyes. Spectacles seem to have been invented in Europe and in China at about the same time (AD *c.*1300). In Europe they originated in Italy, and for centuries they remained the mark of the scholar, since their main use was for reading and most people were unable to read. An early design shows a type of pince-nez (side-pieces came later); early rims were of horn or leather. With the increase of books and the spread of literacy the spectacle trade expanded in the 16th century, but until the 20th century spectacles were worn chiefly by the elderly and scholarly. (Also called glasses.)

spectroscopy /spekˈtroskəpɪ/ n. the branch of science concerned with the investigation and measurement of spectra produced when matter interacts with or emits electromagnetic radiation. Spectroscopic techniques were pioneered by the German scientists Gustav Kirchhoff and Robert Bunsen after the former's discovery in 1859 that each substance, when heated, has its own characteristic emission spectrum. There are now many kinds of spectroscopy which differ according to the region of the electromagnetic spectrum studied (visible, infrared, X-ray, etc.) and the nature of the physical interaction (absorption, emission, scattering, etc.). All depend on the absorption or emission of quanta of energy by atoms and molecules passing between energy states. Spectroscopy is a very powerful tool for chemical analysis and the investigation of the properties of matter, and several techniques are routinely used in laboratories. (See also QUANTUM, SPECTRUM.)

spectrum /ˈspektrəm/ n. (pl. spectra /-trə/) 1 a band of colours, as seen in a rainbow etc., produced by separation of the components of light by their different degrees of refraction according to wavelength. (See note below.) 2 the entire range of wavelengths of electromagnetic radiation. 3 a an image or distribution of components of any electromagnetic radiation arranged in a progressive series according to wavelength. (See note below.) b this as characteristic of a body or substance when emitting or absorbing radiation. 4 a similar image or distribution of components of sound, particles, etc., arranged according to frequency, charge, energy, etc. 5 the entire range or a wide range of anything arranged by degree or quality etc. 6 (in full ocular spectrum) an after-image. □ spectrum analyser a device for analysing oscillation, esp. sound, into its separate components. spectrum analysis = spectral analysis. [L, = image, apparition f. specere look]

▪ The visible spectrum is seen when a prism splits the white light of the sun into its constituent colours. It is arranged according to wavelength, ranging continuously from red (the longest wavelength) to violet (the shortest). It was Sir Isaac Newton who first analysed light in this way. This, however, is but a small part of the whole spectrum of electromagnetic radiation, which ranges (with increasing frequency and decreasing wavelength) through radio waves, microwaves, infrared, visible light, ultraviolet, X-rays, and gamma rays.

Spender /ˈspendə(r)/, Sir Stephen (1909–95), English poet and critic. His Poems (1933) contained both personal and political poems including 'The Pylons', which lent its name to the group of young left-wing poets of the 1930s known as the 'Pylon School'; its members used industrial imagery in their work and included W. H. Auden, C. Day-Lewis, and Louis MacNeice. In his critical work The Destructive Element (1935), Spender defended the importance of political subject-matter in literature. He later wrote the autobiography World Within World (1951), giving an account of his association with the Communist Party.

spinning-jenny /,spɪnɪŋ'dʒenɪ/ n. an early form of spinning-machine, invented by James Hargreaves and patented in 1770. The spinning-jenny was the first machine to use multiple spindles, eight (or later sixteen) of which could be set in motion by a band from one wheel. Improvements made to the process of weaving meant that weavers were working more quickly and spinners could no longer keep up with them. Hargreaves's machinery was opposed, however, and destroyed by a mob fearful of the threat to their employment. The design of the spinning-jenny was later developed by Richard Arkwright and Samuel Crompton.

spinning mule n. a kind of spinning-machine producing yarn on spindles, invented in 1779 by Samuel Crompton, so called because it was a cross between Richard Arkwright's 'water frame' and James Hargreaves's spinning-jenny. It was an improvement upon both, producing yarn of higher quality at greater speed.

spinning-wheel /'spɪnɪŋ,wi:l/ n. a household machine for spinning yarn or thread with a spindle driven by a wheel operated originally by hand, later by a crank or treadle. The spinning-wheel is thought to have been introduced into Europe from India in the early 14th century.

spinose /'spaɪnəʊz, -nəʊs/ adj. (also spinous /-nəs/) esp. Bot. & Zool. having spines.

Spinoza /spɪ'nəʊzə/, Baruch (or Benedict) de (1632–77), Dutch philosopher, of Portuguese-Jewish descent. His unorthodox views led to his expulsion from the Amsterdam synagogue in 1656. Spinoza rejected the Cartesian dualism of spirit and matter in favour of a pantheistic system, seeing God as the single infinite substance, the immanent cause of the universe and not a ruler outside it. His Ethics (1677) sought to formulate a metaphysical system that was mathematically deduced from theorems and hypotheses; its rationalist method broke new ground in biblical analysis. Spinoza espoused a determinist political doctrine, arguing that the individual surrenders his or her natural rights to the state in order to obtain security. □ Spinozism n. Spinozist n. Spinozistic /,spɪnəʊ'zɪstɪk/ adj.

MATERIALISM 2). □ spiritualist n. spiritualistic /,spɪrɪtjʊə'lɪstɪk/ adj.

▪ Belief that spirits of the dead can and do communicate with the living is very ancient and is an element in many religions. Saul clandestinely consulted the woman of Endor (1 Sam. 28) in order to speak with the dead prophet Samuel, but the Jewish prophets disapproved of the practice, and this repugnance was maintained by Christianity. The modern spiritualist movement had its origin in 1848, when three sisters of the Fox family in a small town in New York State caused a sensation by claiming to have communicated with a spirit in their home by a system of rappings. Although attacked by established Churches and by those suspecting charlatanry, spiritualism became immensely popular on both sides of the Atlantic among people wishing to communicate with dead friends or relatives or to know about a future life. Spiritualist Churches and societies were formed, and seances were held at which mediums attempted to communicate with the dead and apparently experienced phenomena including clairvoyance, telepathy, levitation, and the appearance of ectoplasm. Spiritualism is associated particularly with the Victorian period, but was given fresh impetus by the two world wars; it was also one of the few means of exploring the supernatural sanctioned in the USSR.

- Squash developed from rackets at Harrow school in the early 19th century, but it was not until the formation of the Squash Rackets Association in 1928 that the game became more international. It resembles the older game of rackets in many ways, but differs in its use of a softer ball. It is a game for two players, each of whom hits the ball against the front wall of the court in turn, attempting to win points by making the ball too difficult for the other to return. A fast-moving and strenuous game, squash is now popular in the West as a means of keeping fit. World open championships were first held in 1976.

Stalin^1 /ˈstɑːlɪn/ a former name (1924–61) for DONETSK.

Stalin^2 /ˈstɑːlɪn/, Joseph (born Iosif Vissarionovich Dzhugashvili) (1879–1953), Soviet statesman, General Secretary of the Communist Party of the USSR 1922–53. Born in Georgia, he joined the Bolsheviks under Lenin in 1903 and co-founded the party's newspaper Pravda in 1912, adopting the name 'Stalin' (Russ. = 'man of steel') by 1913; in the same year he was exiled to Siberia until just after the Russian Revolution. Following Lenin's death, he became chairman of the Politburo and secured enough support within the party to eliminate Trotsky, who disagreed with his theory of building socialism in the Soviet Union as a base from which Communism could spread. By 1927 he was the uncontested leader of the party, and in the following year he launched a succession of five-year plans for the industrialization and collectivization of agriculture; as a result of this process, some 10 million peasants are thought to have died, either of famine, or, in the case of those who resisted Stalin's policies, of hard labour or by execution. His large-scale purges of the intelligentsia in the 1930s along similarly punitive and ruthless lines removed all opposition, while his direction of the armed forces led to victory over Hitler 1941–5. After 1945 he played a large part in the restructuring of postwar Europe and attempted to maintain a firm grip on other Communist states; he was later denounced by Khrushchev and the Eastern bloc countries.

▪ True stars were formerly known as the 'fixed stars', to distinguish them from the planets or 'wandering stars'. They are gaseous spheres consisting primarily of hydrogen and helium, there being an equilibrium between the compressional force of gravity and the outward pressure of radiation resulting from internal thermonuclear fusion reactions. Apart from the sun, the nearest star to earth is Proxima Centauri. All others are many light-years away, so that they appear in relatively fixed positions in the sky. Some six thousand stars are visible to the naked eye, but there are actually more than a hundred thousand million in our own Galaxy, while billions of other galaxies are known. A star is classified according to its spectral type, which is related to its mass and stage in its life cycle (see HARVARD CLASSIFICATION and HERTZSPRUNG–RUSSELL DIAGRAM).

[OE stēam f. Gmc]

steamboat /ˈstiːmbəʊt/ n. a boat propelled by a steam engine, especially a paddle-wheel craft of a type used widely on rivers in the 19th century. Such boats were constructed experimentally in the 1780s, following James Watt's improvements of the steam engine, and pioneered most successfully by Robert Fulton. In the US the most famous steamboats were those on the Mississippi, noted for their ornate fittings and for the risk of fire and other hazards to which they were prone. (See also STEAMSHIP.)

steam engine n. 1 an engine in which the successive expansion and rapid condensation of steam forces a piston (or pistons) to move up and down in a cylinder (or cylinders) to produce motive power, which is transmitted to a crank by means of a connecting-rod. (See note below.) 2 a railway or road locomotive powered by this.

▪ The power of steam had been demonstrated by Hero of Alexandria in AD 100 but remained unrealized until the work of Thomas Newcomen, James Watt, and others in the 18th century. The steam engine has changed little in its essentials since it was improved by Richard Trevithick in the early 19th century. It made possible the Industrial Revolution, being used first for pumping water from mines and later for driving machinery in mills. It had reached its highest development by *c.*1900, when steam provided the power for factories, ships, railway locomotives, and traction engines. It has now been largely replaced by the steam turbine and the internal-combustion engine.

steamer /ˈstiːmə(r)/ n. 1 a person or thing that steams. 2 a vessel propelled by steam, esp. a ship. 3 a receptacle in which things are steamed, esp. cooked by steam. □ steamer rug US a travelling-rug.

steamship /ˈstiːmʃɪp/ n. a ship propelled by a steam engine. From the early 19th century steam engines were used to power ships. At first they were used as auxiliary engines on what were essentially sailing-ships, but in 1832 HMS Rhadamanthus crossed the Atlantic entirely under steam power. Several steamship lines were established to exploit the profitable Atlantic route. A disadvantage of steamships for long journeys was that they were obliged to carry large amounts of fuel, and sailing-ships for carrying cargo survived into the 20th century. (See also SHIP and STEAMBOAT.)

▪ The name steel is generally applied to iron alloys containing up to 2.2 per cent carbon, with the total non-ferrous content not exceeding three per cent. Additives such as chromium, manganese, silicon, and other elements and special manufacturing and finishing techniques are employed to give desired properties of hardness, strength, ductility, corrosion resistance, etc. The basis of modern steel-making is the removal of most of the non-ferrous elements from molten pig-iron by combining them with oxygen, but early techniques of making steel relied on the absorption of charcoal by heated iron. Originally (*c.*1200 BC) it was only possible to produce steel surfaces on iron weapons and tools, but by *c.*200 BC steel-making had started in India. However, steel remained a small-scale specialist product, despite the improvements introduced in England in 1740 by the mechanic and engineer Benjamin Huntsman (1704–76), who produced and refined steel by heating in a crucible. Production of steel in bulk became possible with the introduction of the Bessemer converter and the open-hearth process in the 19th century. These methods, largely obsolete, have now given way to the electric-arc furnace and the basic oxygen process.

Steele /stiːl/, Sir Richard (1672–1729), Irish essayist and dramatist. He founded and wrote for the periodicals the Tatler (1709–11) and the Spectator (1711–12), the latter in collaboration with Joseph Addison; both had an important influence on the manners, morals, and literature of the time. Steele also launched the short-lived periodical the Guardian (1713), to which Addison contributed.

Sterne /stɜːn/, Laurence (1713–68), Irish novelist. He worked as a clergyman in the north of England before publishing the first two volumes of his best-known work The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy in 1759. Seven subsequent volumes appeared between 1761 and 1767. Both praised for its humour and condemned for its indecency at the time, Tristram Shandy parodied the developing conventions of the novel form and used devices — including a distinctive fluid narrative — which anticipated many of the stylistic concerns of modernist and later writers. He suffered from tuberculosis and after 1762 spent much of his time in France and Italy, later writing A Sentimental Journey through France and Italy (1768).

Stern Gang /stɜːn/ the British name for a militant Zionist group that campaigned in Palestine during the 1940s for the creation of a Jewish state. ▪ The world's most important stock exchanges are those based in London, New York (Wall Street), and Tokyo, although the first stock exchange was established in Antwerp in the 15th century. A London stock exchange was not formed until late in the 18th century; before that dealings had previously taken place among bankers, brokers, and financial houses. Members of the new association met regularly at a coffee-house, and early in the 19th century acquired a building of their own. The New York Stock Exchange had even humbler beginnings, for it started (at the end of the 18th century) as a street market under a spreading tree in Lower Wall Street. That in London (now officially called the International Stock Exchange) formerly made a rigid division of membership between the jobbers or dealers and those who acted as brokers; this was abolished in 1986 (see BIG BANG 2).

Stone Age the prehistoric period when weapons and tools were made out of stone or of organic materials such as bone, wood, or horn (see PREHISTORY). It is subdivided into the palaeolithic, mesolithic, and neolithic periods.

stonechat /'stəʊntʃæt/ n. a small migratory thrush of the genus Saxicola, with a call like two stones being knocked together; esp. S. torquata, with an orange breast and dark head.

stone circle n. a megalithic monument of a type found mainly in western Europe, consisting of usu. standing stones arranged more or less in a circle. The earliest stone circles date from the neolithic period and are often placed within a henge, as seen at Avebury in England. In the early Bronze Age many hundreds of small circles were constructed in western Britain, often from quite small stones. Stone circles frequently have other stone settings both within them and nearby, sometimes forming complex arrangements. Stonehenge is the most sophisticated circle known, though it is atypical in both style and location. Circles often appear to be aligned astronomically, especially with particular sunrise or sunset positions, and it is generally agreed that they had a ritual function.

stonehatch /'stəʊnhætʃ/ n. a ringed plover.

Stonehenge /stəʊn'hendʒ/ a megalithic monument on Salisbury Plain in Wiltshire, England, completed in three main constructional phases from *c.*2950 BC. It is composed of a concentric bank and ditch around a circle of bluestones (believed to be from the Preseli Hills in South Wales), which in turn surrounds a circle of sarsen stones that were all originally surmounted by stone lintels. Within this inner circle is a horseshoe arrangement of five triliths with the axis aligned on the midsummer sunrise — an orientation that was probably for ritual rather than scientific purposes. It has also been suggested that the monument has several other astronomical alignments, which may have been used to predict eclipses and other phenomena. Stonehenge is popularly associated with the Druids, although this connection is now generally rejected by scholars; the monument has also been attributed to the Phoenicians, Romans, Vikings, and visitors from other worlds.

stonemason /'stəʊnˌmeɪs(ə)n/ n. a person who cuts, prepares, and builds with stone. □ stonemasonry n.

Strauss^1 /straʊs/, Johann (known as Strauss the Elder) (1804–49), Austrian composer. He was a leading composer of waltzes from the 1830s, although probably his best-known work is the Radetzky March (1838).

Strauss^2 /straʊs/, Johann (known as Strauss the Younger) (1825–99), Austrian composer. The son of Strauss the Elder, he became known as 'the waltz king', composing many famous waltzes such as The Blue Danube (1867) and Tales from the Vienna Woods (1868). He is also noted for the operetta Die Fledermaus (1874).

Strauss^3 /straʊs/, Richard (1864–1949), German composer. From the mid-1880s he composed a succession of symphonic poems, including Till Eulenspiegels Lustige Streiche (1895) and Also Sprach Zarathustra (1896). His reputation grew as he turned to opera, exploring polytonality in Salome (1905) and Elektra (1905). The latter marked the beginning of his collaboration with the librettist Hugo von Hofmannsthal; together they produced such popular operas as Der Rosenkavalier (1911). Often regarded as the last of the 19th-century romantic composers, Strauss retained his romanticism to the end of his long career, notably in Four Last Songs (1948) for soprano and orchestra.

Stravinsky /strə'vɪnskɪ/, Igor (Fyodorovich) (1882–1971), Russian-born composer. He made his name as a composer for Diaghilev's Ballets Russes, writing the music for the ballets The Firebird (1910) and The Rite of Spring (1913); both shocked Paris audiences with their irregular rhythms and frequent dissonances. Stravinsky later developed a neoclassical style, typified by the ballet Pulcinella (1920) and, ultimately, the opera The Rake's Progress (1948–51), based on William Hogarth's paintings. In the 1950s he experimented with serialism in such works as the cantata Threni (1957–8). Resident in the US from the outbreak of the Second World War, Stravinsky became an American citizen in 1945.

Strindberg /ˈstrɪndbɜːg/, (Johan) August (1849–1912), Swedish dramatist and novelist. Although best known outside Scandinavia as a dramatist and precursor of expressionism in the theatre, Strindberg was also a leading figure in the naturalist movement in literature; his satire The Red Room (1879) is regarded as Sweden's first modern novel. His earlier plays, also naturalistic in style, depict a bitter power struggle between the sexes, notably in The Father (1887) and Miss Julie (1888). His later plays are typically tense, symbolic, psychic dramas; the trilogy To Damascus (1898–1904) and, more particularly, A Dream Play (1902), introduced expressionist techniques and are of major importance for the development of modern drama.
